Full-Title

Screwed

Contents

Forward v

1 THE HIGH TABLE 1

2 THE AGENDA OF THE HIGH TABLE 25

3 PONGA PONGA 49

4 SILENCED SOLUTIONS 71

5 ON MONEY 93

6 ON GOVERNMENT 115

7 LOST PRIVACY AND FREEDOM 133

8 COMMON SENSE 158

APPENDIX 181

Forward

This publication sets its sights on the High Table... the hidden hands pulling strings behind the scenes, and the slow erosion of your financial control. We're here to expose the issues hollowing out this nation, both the ones you see and the ones you're not supposed to.

THE GREATEST TRICK THE DEVIL EVER PULLED WAS CONVINCING THE WORLD HE DIDN'T EXIST

The Normalcy Theory

The Normalcy Theory is the belief that tomorrow will be just like today. This mindset often causes people to underestimate or ignore the potential for natural or man-made disruptions. Understanding the Normalcy Theory does not promote paranoia or fear of disaster but rather encourages situational awareness and better preparation.

Chapter 1

THE HIGH TABLE

The invisible puppet masters

“The High Table”

"If you are not seated at the table, you are on the menu"

In the action-packed world of John Wick, starring Keanu Reeves, there exists a powerful and secretive crime syndicate known as "The High Table." It's a council of twelve ultra-wealthy crime lords who govern the global underworld, wielding influence over the most powerful criminal organizations on the planet. With the support of corrupt politicians, multinational corporations, corrupt law enforcement, and military agencies, this council rules ruthlessly and efficiently.

Secret societies, like the High Table, by their very nature of concealing their aims, rules, rituals, and memberships, often breed fear, suspicion, and distrust from the public. Throughout history, some secret societies have been formed with the purpose of plotting political or social uprisings, utilizing strict measures to maintain secrecy until their plans could be executed.

The commitment to secrecy within these organizations is often reinforced by severe punishments for members who break their pledges, ranging from banishment to, in extreme cases, death.

These measures not only aim to keep secrets within the group but also create significant challenges for individuals wishing to leave, as seeking external protection might necessitate revealing their membership and risking potential retribution. This is why they must remain secret.

Historically, most secret societies, like the High Table, have frequently been associated with criminal activities, using their secretive nature to facilitate corruption and illicit dealings. The clandestine nature of these groups can make it difficult for researchers to understand their operations and verify their membership, further contributing to the air of mystery and suspicion surrounding them.

While the motivations and activities of secret societies vary, their inherent secrecy carries several severely detrimental effects. These include fostering distrust, enabling harmful behaviors, spreading misinformation, facilitating criminal activities, and creating opportunities for the misuse of power without accountability, all for the purpose of financial gain and power. The rise of the internet has both amplified some of these negative impacts and introduced new challenges in understanding and addressing the influence of clandestine networks in the modern world.

Secret societies are not new. Clandestine organizations like the High Table have been around since the time of King Solomon.

With the internet and the digital age, the power of these societies to influence the world has grown exponentially.

Of course, John Wick is a Hollywood fantasy, but sometimes fiction holds a mirror to reality. In our world, a similar shadowy force exists. They're known as the global elites (of which only a portion are corrupt conspirators). Like the High Table, they operate beneath the surface, hidden in plain sight. Their agenda isn't broadcast, at least not until recently, and that's easy to manage when you control over 90% of the mainstream media. They don't fear the law. They are the law. Violence isn't their primary method of control, but don't think for a moment they're above using it. Dead whistleblowers don't whistle.

Some will scoff at this and call the existence of the High Table a conspiracy theory. Maybe they're the same folks who believe Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in the JFK assassination, that Jeffrey Epstein took his own life in a prison cell during a bizarre camera outage and guard absence, and that our government has no knowledge of UFOs. Don't forget, Jack Ruby supposedly killed Oswald out of patriotic impulse. Conveniently, he died of cancer in jail, isolated from talking to anyone.

The definition of a conspiracy is simple: it's a secret plan by a group to carry out something unlawful or harmful.

A conspiracy theory, then, is an explanation of an event or set of circumstances that points to a covert plot, typically orchestrated by a small, powerful group with hidden motives.

While some conspiracy theories remain speculative, many have turned out to be true. And when they do, they're no longer theories; they become history.

In some cases, conspiracy thinking has even served democracy. Public suspicion can put pressure on governments to release classified information or provide transparency on controversial events they would rather keep hidden. So, why do conspiracy theories exist in such abundance? Because people are naturally skeptical of coincidences, uncomfortable with randomness, and seek explanations that offer a sense of order or control.

According to a 2022 poll by YouGov and The Economist, nearly 75% of Americans believe in at least one conspiracy theory, ranging from government cover-ups to corporate manipulation. It's not fringe thinking anymore, it's mainstream.

Some of the most well-known conspiracy theories include the moon landing being faked, the idea that the 9/11 attacks were an inside job by our own government, the assassination of President John F. Kennedy being part of a broader government plot, and ongoing allegations that the U.S. government is hiding ex-traterrestrial life at Area 51. But these pale in comparison to what might be the greatest and most consequential conspiracy of all: the existence of a global elite power structure, or what this book refers to as the High Table.

This conspiracy didn't start with flying saucers or secret assassins. It began in 1913 with the creation of the Federal Reserve. This central banking system, privately controlled and politically insulated, marked the beginning of a slow but deliberate transfer of economic power from the people to the financial elite.

And this isn't theory, it's a statistical fact:

According to the Credit Suisse Global Wealth Report and Forbes, the top 80 billionaires in the world now own as much wealth as the rest of the world's population. So each billionaire is worth as much as approximately 100 million people.

In the United States, the bottom 50% of Americans collectively own just 2.6% of the nation's wealth, while the top 1% own more than 30%.

The total global wealth is estimated at $400 to $500 trillion.

The U.S. national debt in 2025 stands at over $36 trillion and climbing, meaning every taxpayer is, effectively, a debtor to a system they don't control.

Do the math. We are somewhat of an economic slave to a machine built and operated by multinational elites. The interest on your mortgage, your car loan, your credit cards, all flow into a system designed not to free you, but to bind you and keep you in the 2.6% of the nation's wealth.

So, who collects these interest payments? Who profits from this structure? Follow the money, and you'll find the fingerprints of the High Table, those global power brokers who don't wear crowns or badges but who rule just the same.

This isn't science fiction or fear-mongering. It's a cold look at a system rigged from the top down. When you own the media, it's easy to rewrite the story.

It was President Donald Trump who first brought the phrase "FAKE NEWS" into the spotlight. Even those who are not his fans now admit that he was correct. There's a whole lot of B.S. floating around. One should ask, "Why is the fake news fake?"

If everyone would take a moment to check who owns the majority of the media outlets, the global elites, the High Table, then it's only common sense to understand that they strongly promote their own agenda, as well as their own candidates.

But what about the bad news (endless disasters and doom)? The trivial news (celebrity gossip and distractions)? Or, most importantly, the hidden news, the stuff we're never told? The hidden news is the purpose of this publication. What you don't know can hurt you.

In this book, we call these elites "The High Table," as a label, but they could just as easily be known as the Invisible World Government or the Ultimate Decision Committee. What matters is not their name but understanding how and why they make things happen and how and why they operate.

Natural events like earthquakes, tsunamis, tornadoes, and volcanic eruptions are acts of nature. But global events—wars, inflation, stock market crashes, political unrest, those are the product of human engineering. In a world where nothing happens by accident, we must ask: Who? Why? How?

As of April 2025, there are 15 individuals worldwide whose net worth exceeds $100 billion, placing them in the exclusive "centibillionaire" club. Collectively, these individuals hold approximately $2.4 trillion in wealth, accounting for about 15% of the total wealth of all 3,028 billionaires globally. With today's inflation, even billionaires aren't what they used to be.

Some might even be called "middle-class billionaires." And some say there are a few trillionaires out there too, quiet, hidden, and well-protected.

Most of the world's billionaires do not want to rule the world. They are extremely necessary, play a vital role in the global economy, and are critically needed. Many are content with their extravagant lifestyles and just want to enjoy life, preserve their wealth, and protect their families. There are other billionaires who risk it all to save the world, not own it.

Then there are the billionaire/trillionaire global elites that sit at the High Table with greedy, diabolical intentions, a mere handful that are truly dangerous.

It's OK to be an elite. The world is full of them. They all believe that they know more than you. A lot of times, they do, but that doesn't give them the right to control you. The ultra-rich global elites come in two categories: old money and new money.

Regardless of their origin, they enjoy enormous privilege. What elevates them is not just their wealth, but a combination of ambition, intellect, greed, elite education, family legacy, political access, and control over the world's most powerful corporations. This tiny group holds an outrageously outsized influence over our lives, especially economically.

Unlike the fictional High Table, today's global elites don't send assassins (usually). Their weapon of choice is control of the global financial system. They dominate central banks and fund the rise of political leaders around the world to do their bidding once elected (but not everyone). They have the means to hire the brightest minds and leverage the most advanced technologies, making it nearly impossible for anyone to compete with them.

To them, if it's not their problem, it doesn't matter. They are the ones that create most problems for us, and for them to resolve... all for a cost to us, of course.

They belong to an exclusive club and we're not on the guest list.

Follow The Money

While no personal trillionaires are officially acknowledged, a handful of elite families indirectly control trillions. They hide behind a tangled web of companies and entities so complex that even a dream team of the FBI, Scotland Yard, Sherlock Holmes, and Columbo couldn't piece it together. For these masters of influence, control is far more valuable than ownership.

How do they control the masses? They own the media and the banks. Fifteen billionaires own America's major media outlets. Six corporations, Comcast, Disney, AT&T, Paramount Global, Fox, and Sony, control 90 percent of what we read, hear, and see. It's not journalism. It's public relations for the ruling class.

Although the Rothschild banking dynasty laid the foundation for most central banks, today, most are controlled by powerful boards and shareholders who are themselves tightly linked to global elites.

One of the High Table's greatest tools is the Federal Reserve. Contrary to its name, it's neither federal nor a reserve. It controls our economy by setting interest rates and regulating currency flow. It serves as the banker for the U.S. Treasury. It buys Treasury bonds, IOUs that we, the taxpayers, pay the interest on. After the Bureau of Engraving prints currency, the Fed distributes the money to the central banks.

In 2023 alone, our interest payments reached $659 billion. That has doubled in just two years. By 2025, the annual interest payment on our national debt is nearly 2 trillion. So, where does the money go? That will be explained shortly. For now, remember this: whoever controls the banks and media controls everything, from interest rates and taxes to food prices, gas, healthcare, insurance, real estate, and beyond.

So, who are the real members of the High Table, the global elite pulling strings behind the curtain? Who's calling the shots? Where do they live, and what are their names? The truth is, they live wherever they please. Like a sophisticated criminal syndicate, they don't carry ID cards or announce their agenda. Their power thrives in secrecy, behind layers of proxies, organizations, and influence.

They prefer the shadows. It's safer to "keep the tiger behind the bamboo." Their presence, like that of viruses, wars, and poverty, has existed for ages. And through their unchecked greed and control, they've created and orchestrated many of the world's greatest misfortunes, even wars, all in the pursuit of power and profit.

Membership

Among the many ultra-powerful and often little-known policy-making groups that serve as instruments of this elite power structure, and the membership rosters of the High Table, are the Club of Rome, the Bilderberg Group, and the Vatican Bank, as well as the Freemasons, the Bohemian Club, the World Economic Forum, and the Trilateral Commission. The collective wealth and influence of their members is almost beyond comprehension. It is believed by a lot of people that many of these individuals, ultra-wealthy, well-connected, and ideologically aligned, operate as de facto members of the High Table, shaping the world according to their design and agenda (discussed in Chapter 2).

Everyone should take a closer look at these organizations shaping global policy from behind closed doors. Their names may sound bureaucratic or benign, but their influence is anything but. Groups like the Club of Rome, Bilderberg Group, the World Economic Forum, Trilateral Commission, Committee of 300, Council for Global Environmental Governance, and even the Freemasons, have all been linked by researchers and whistleblowers to a common agenda. That agenda is the consolidation of power under the global elite and the slow erosion of individual freedom.

The Club of Rome, founded in 1968 by Aurelio Peccei and Alexander King, claimed its mission was to address humanity's biggest challenges, including climate change, overpopulation, and economic inequality. But its 1972 report, The Limits to Growth, didn't offer solutions. It offered control. It promoted aggressive depopulation strategies in the name of "sustainability," urging governments to impose population policies under the guise of environmental balance. Today, the Club's unelected members continue to advise world leaders on how to manage crises. In many cases, this means helping to manufacture fear in order to justify centralized action.

Similarly, the Bilderberg Group, established in 1954, meets annually in luxury and secrecy. Presidents, prime ministers, royalty, corporate executives, and banking titans all gather behind locked doors. No press. No recordings. No accountability. Their focus includes global economics, political restructuring, and media influence. Membership overlaps heavily with the Club of Rome, and the outcomes of their meetings often prelude sweeping policy changes in the Western world. When the most powerful people on Earth meet in secret, free societies have every right to ask what they are hiding.

The Trilateral Commission, founded in 1973 by David Rockefeller and Zbigniew Brzezinski, set out to "foster closer cooperation" between North America, Western Europe, and Japan.

In practice, it has functioned as a policy factory for globalization, encouraging trade pacts, corporate mergers, and political alignment that weaken national sovereignty. Its members, drawn from top banking institutions, think tanks, and government positions, are not accountable to voters. Yet their fingerprints are all over the dismantling of borders, manufacturing outsourcing, and the rise of unregulated global finance.

Tucked away in the redwoods of Northern California is a 2,700-acre campground called Bohemian Grove. It is not listed on tourist maps. There are no public events, no press access, and no transparency. But every summer, some of the most powerful men in the world gather there. Former presidents, Fortune 500 CEOs, bankers, generals, and media owners all meet quietly, far away from cameras or accountability.

This private retreat is run by the Bohemian Club, an elite all-male group founded in the late 1800s in San Francisco. What began as a small club for artists and writers eventually became a playground for political and financial elites. Each July, they meet for about two weeks. The official story is that it is just a place to relax, enjoy nature, drink heavily, and watch theatrical performances. No business is supposed to be discussed.

But when presidents, defense contractors, oil executives, and foreign policy advisers are all gathered in the same forest, it is hard to believe they are only trading ghost stories and martinis.

One of the strangest rituals at Bohemian Grove is the Cremation of Care. During this opening ceremony, men dressed in robes light a bonfire beneath a giant 40-foot stone owl and perform a symbolic "sacrifice" to rid themselves of worry and responsibility.

They call it a harmless tradition. To outsiders, it looks like an occult theater wrapped in elite symbolism.

Why should this matter? Because these same men shape global policy. They control the flow of money, information, and military power. And they are gathering in complete secrecy to bond, network, and potentially make decisions that affect millions of lives. It is not illegal, but it certainly raises questions. Many major policies and political alliances throughout history have started in places just like this. Quiet, informal conversations can lead to very real outcomes.

At the very least, Bohemian Grove is a place where powerful people tighten their inner circles. At worst, it is where influence is traded behind the curtain, with no public record, no oversight, no accountability, and... no tickets available.

Whatever your view, one thing is certain. The most powerful people in the world prefer to gather where no one is watching.

Then there's the Council for Global Environmental Governance, a newer player, but no less ambitious. With the climate crisis as its moral banner, the council pushes for sweeping international regulations under the guise of saving the planet.

While its goals sound noble, its means often involve empowering unelected bureaucrats to override national governments. Carbon credit markets, travel restrictions, and surveillance-based compliance systems are just a few of the "solutions" promoted, solutions that chip away at civil liberties in the name of sustainability.

And finally, the Freemasons also deserve mention, a centuries-old secret society with origins dating back to medieval stonemason guilds, but whose modern influence has extended into politics, banking, and global affairs. While many members insist it's a fraternal organization promoting charity and brotherhood, others point to the Masons' elaborate rituals, hidden symbolism, and presence among high-ranking officials and influential decision-makers.

U.S. presidents, Supreme Court justices, and global business leaders have openly belonged to Masonic lodges. Their influence isn't just ceremonial, it's structural. Critics argue that the Freemasons function as gatekeepers to elite power, using allegiance and secrecy to protect their own while steering key institutions toward globalist goals. When power is protected by ritual secrets and loyalty rather than transparency, democracy is compromised.

Together, these organizations form a mosaic of power, interlinked, self-reinforcing, and largely untouchable by democracy. They don't need to pass laws to shape our lives. They advise, they lobby, they fund, and they steer. Their members sit on corporate boards, in government offices, and at the helm of media empires.

They promote policies that sound righteous but yield control to the few. They call it progress. We experience it as regulation, surveillance, censorship, and taxation. And most of them are not elected.

This is what the High Table looks like, not cloaked in myth, but seated in boardrooms, conference halls, and elite retreats. Their mission is not to represent the people, but to manage them. And every time we lose a liberty in the name of global cooperation, they get one step closer to their goal: a world governed not by nations, but by networks of unchecked power.

Ultimately, it all boils down to two things: control and money. Why else would someone spend $150 million to win a U.S. Senate seat that pays just $174,000 per year? Why would presidential candidates pour $10 billion into a race for a job that pays $400,000 annually?

The math doesn't add up, unless the real reward lies not in the salary, but, for some, in the immense power, influence, and access that come with the title.

However, not all candidates are lackeys for the High Table. It takes extreme courage to stand against the High Table, and to do so, one must risk everything... even one's life.

The Green Trojan Horse

Environmental and climate change issues have become the perfect entry point, the back door, if you will, that global elites use to infiltrate and influence both governments and the general population. They frame these causes as universal goods, and who would dare oppose clean air, safe drinking water, or a healthy planet? It's the one subject that no individual, politician, or institution can openly contest without backlash.

Is the climate changing? Of course. It always has. Most scientists agree that Earth's spin, tilt, and orbit play major roles over time.

But beneath the surface of this noble narrative lies something more strategic: control. Environmentalism has become the Trojan Horse of global governance. It provides the global elite with a politically untouchable platform that grants them access to power structures at every level, from local governments to international bodies like the United Nations.

Through this lens, environmental concerns are weaponized. Fear-based messaging about rising seas, burning forests, and climate catastrophe saturates the media and policy debates.

But while we're told to cut carbon footprints, the elite fly private jets, own sprawling mansions, and operate over 1,000 coal-burning factories. They preach sustainability but rarely practice it. And while the urgency feels real, the proposed solutions always seem to centralize power in the hands of a few.

The agenda rarely focuses on innovation or freedom. It leans heavily toward regulation, restriction, and surveillance. The environment is not the enemy. But when powerful interests use it as a cover to manipulate behavior and concentrate influence, we must question the motives behind the message.

The Great Hypocrisy

The most powerful voices among the global elite often cloak themselves in morality. They speak of justice, equity, and the greater good, yet time and again, their actions betray a striking hypocrisy. They preach restraint while living in excess. They demand sacrifice from the public while exempting themselves from the very rules they impose. Let's examine a few of the more glaring contradictions:

Environmental Champions, For You, Not for Me

They passionately promote green energy and climate consciousness while jetting around the world in private planes, living in sprawling multi-mansion estates, and owning factories belching pollution into the skies. Many of them have stakes in more than 1,000 coal-fired plants across the globe. These are the same people telling you to ditch your gas stove and drive an electric car. But how many of them are behind the wheel of a used Nissan or turning down the thermostat in the winter to save energy? The hypocrisy couldn't be more obvious.

Gun Control for the Masses, but Armed Guards for Me

Elites demand strict gun laws and criticize the right of everyday citizens to defend themselves, all while surrounding themselves with heavily armed private security. Their message is clear: your safety is negotiable, theirs is not. Thomas Jefferson himself once warned that the Second Amendment was a safeguard against tyranny of government. These elites know that, and that's exactly why they'd rather you not be armed.

Open Borders for the Country, High Walls at Home

They advocate for loose immigration policies and open borders, yet they build fortresses for themselves, massive estates with armed guards, surveillance systems, and layers of fencing. They welcome millions across our borders but become suspiciously silent when those same migrants show up anywhere near their gated communities. Remember Martha's Vineyard? The welcome lasted barely 24 hours.

Wall Street Cheerleaders, Doomsday Preppers in Disguise

They hype the economy, boost consumer confidence, and tell the rest of us that the market is stable, while quietly converting their assets into gold, crypto, and hard property. They build underground bunkers and prep for collapse, even as they tell the average citizen, "Everything is fine." If the market is so solid, why are they planning for the next crash like it's tomorrow? Many experts suggest the market is inflated anywhere from 100 to 300 percent of its true value.

Frugality for the Public, Feasting in Private

We're told to tighten our belts, save money, eat healthy, and conserve, while they indulge in five-star luxury. The same elite class that lectures the public through think tanks and advisory panels feasts on Beef Wellington, Lobster Thermidor, and rare vintages of wine flown in from across the globe. Meanwhile, nearly 60 percent of American households live paycheck to paycheck, struggling to cover basic necessities.

This isn't about envy, it's about honesty. When those in power insist we must do with less while they enjoy more than ever, it reveals their true agenda: control through double standards.

The great hypocrisy of the elite is blatant and insulting.

The Deep State Machine

The High Table wouldn't be half as effective without the help of the Deep State. Until recently, the term "Deep State" was usually dismissed as a paranoid myth, a crazy conspiracy theory. Lately, that has changed. Most Americans do believe that there's an invisible layer of power that now exists here in the United States that only serves the global elites and themselves.

The Deep State is an enormous network of rogue government officials, career bureaucrats, media moguls, intelligence agencies, defense department contractors, and thousands of private companies and lobbyists, as well as radical think tanks. The Deep State survives across administrations and does a lot of dirty work and heavy lifting for the High Table elites in total secrecy. The Deep State thrives on chaos. It's their business model to stay in power.

This isn't to imply that most government workers are corrupt. Most government employees are great, loyal, and necessary. But those in the Deep State do not serve the people. Good governance is vital to our well-being. But let's not pretend everyone in power has our best interests at heart. Power corrupts, and secret power corrupts absolutely... a lot more.

For a visual, check out the pyramid at the end of the chapter. It should probably be flipped upside down to reflect the real flow of wealth and power.

More convincingly, consider this quote from David Rockefeller in his 2011 Memoirs:

"Some believe we, the Rockefeller family, are a part of a secret cabal, working against the best interest of the United States, characterizing my family and me as internationalists, and conspiring with others around the world to build a more integrated global political and economic structure. One world, if you will. If that's the charge, I stand guilty and am proud of it." — David Rockefeller, 2011 Memoirs.

He financially supported and attended Bilderberg meetings and helped create the Trilateral Commission. Sometimes, they tell you the truth. We just don't listen.

The Georgia Guidestones: a glimpse into the new world order

One of the most controversial monuments in recent American history was the Georgia Guidestones, often dubbed the "American Stonehenge." Erected in 1980 in Elbert County, Georgia, and formed in the shape of a cross, it stood 20 feet high and weighed over 42,000 pounds. The monument featured ten "commandments" for humanity, written in eight languages. At first glance, the messages seemed benign, calls for balance with nature, justice, and unity. But a closer look reveals a far more chilling vision.

Are the Georgia Guidestones a work of the High Table? It reportedly cost $10 million to build, $38 million in today's money, and was commissioned under the pseudonym R.C. Christian, who disappeared after its completion. The messages included:

- Maintain humanity under 500 million in balance with nature. (Who decides who stays out of 7.5 billion people on Earth?)
- Guide reproduction wisely, improving fitness and diversity. (Echoes of eugenics.)
- Unite humanity with a new living language. (There are over 7,000 languages today.)

- Rule passion, faith, and tradition with tempered reason. (Diminishing religion and history?)
- Protect people with fair laws and just courts. (Sounds good, but by whose standards?)
- Resolve disputes in a World Court. (The UN and World Court are rife with corruption.)
- Avoid petty laws and useless officials. (Half our government wouldn't survive this rule.)
- Balance personal rights with social duties. (A tricky balancing act.)
- Prize truth, beauty, love, and seeking harmony with the infinite.
- Be not a cancer on Earth. Leave room for nature. Leave room for nature.

The very first directive carved into the stone read: "Maintain humanity under 500,000,000 in perpetual balance with nature." With the global population currently around 8 billion, this would require eliminating over 90% of the world's people. Who decides who gets to stay? Who disappears? It's a vision of population control so extreme. Are you and I included in the remaining 10%? Don't count on it.

Even more unsettling was the second message: a call to "guide reproduction wisely, improving fitness and diversity." To some, this sounded dangerously close to eugenics—the idea of selectively breeding the human race to create a genetically "superior" society. But who determines who's genetically worthy? According to this philosophy, reproduction wouldn't be a right; it would be a privilege granted by those in power.

It's worth noting that both the Club of Rome and the Bilderberg Group, two elite institutions tied to global power and influence, have discussed population reduction in various policy papers and conferences. Whether through resource planning or veiled suggestions of more extreme measures, their interest in depopulation is not a myth. Could pandemics, warfare, or famine serve as the means to this end?

Then, in a bizarre twist, the Georgia Guidestones were destroyed by a bomb on July 6, 2022. Within hours, what remained of the site was bulldozed. No suspects were ever caught. No thorough investigation followed. It was as if the monument and its message had to be erased as quickly as it was revealed.

Whether the Guidestones were a warning, a prophecy, or a plan is up for debate. However, one thing is clear: the ideology they promoted was not one of freedom. It was one of control. And in the world of the High Table, control is the ultimate currency.

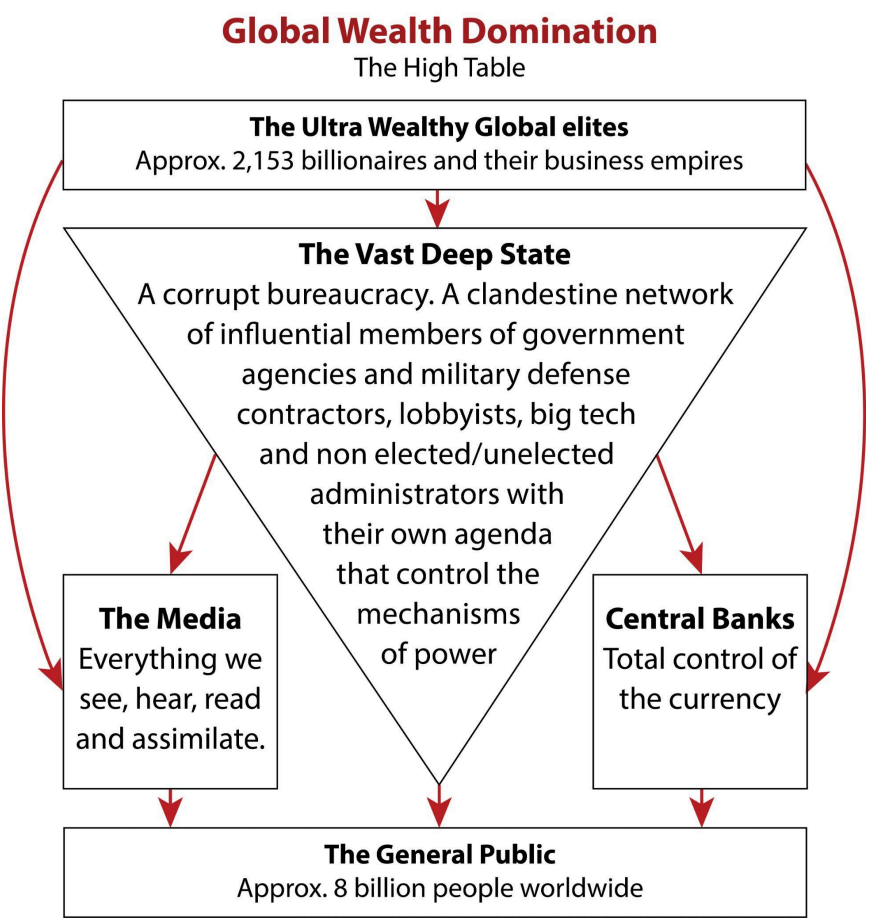

The existence of powerful policy making think tanks like the Club of Rome and the Bilderberg Group cannot be denied or ignored.

Their overlapping membership rosters of the most powerful people on the planet, and their close connections with each other, hiding behind the guise of a utopian society, can be viewed online. Who would spend tens of millions of dollars to erect the Georgia Guidestones to promote the elites' new world order?

David Rockefeller's admission, in his memoirs, that he was part of a secret cabal should validate any conspiracy theories about the High Table's existence.

You might wonder, “How does this all affect me?” Your finances and freedoms.

Remember: The Devil's greatest trick was convincing the world he didn't exist.

Global Wealth Domination
The High Table
The Ultra Wealthy Global elites
Approx. 2,153 billionaires and their business empires
The Vast Deep State
A corrupt bureaucracy. A clandestine network of influential members of government agencies and military defense contractors, lobbyists, big tech and non elected/unelected administrators with their own agenda that control the mechanisms of power
The Media
Everything we see, hear, read and assimilate.
Central Banks
Total control of the currency
The General Public
Approx. 8 billion people worldwide

Chapter 2

THE AGENDA OF THE HIGH TABLE

A New World Order

26 ~ CHARLES MATTERA

“The Agenda”

History, when studied with a discerning eye, is one of our greatest teachers. Over the centuries, the most ambitious rulers on Earth have shared one common goal: total control. Think of Caesar, Napoleon, or Genghis Khan: towering figures of their age (though not in stature). Each of them dreamed of ruling the world, and each came remarkably close in their own right. But ultimately, they all failed.

They failed because even the most formidable armies have limitations. Swords and cannons can win battles, but they cannot command the human spirit. Empires built on brute force eventually crumble. But what if they had something more powerful than steel? What if they had access to unlimited money, could control the flow of information, and manipulate public perception across continents?

Enter... the High Table.

This modern empire doesn't raise armies, it raises capital. It doesn't invade nations, it installs politicians. It doesn't conquer with tanks, it conquers with currency, propaganda, and networks.

Unlike the warlords of the past, the High Table has at its disposal a tool that trumps all: the power of global finance. Through their control of central banks, particularly the Federal Reserve, which despite its name is neither federal nor a true reserve, they can regulate the money supply, set interest rates, and essentially dictate the economic future of entire nations. This isn't just an American problem; central banking networks like the Bank for International Settlements (BIS), the European Central Bank, and others form an interconnected global monetary cartel.

In parallel, the High Table controls a vast network of media empires. Roughly 90% of U.S. media outlets are owned by just six conglomerates: Comcast, Disney, AT&T (Warner Bros.), Paramount Global, Fox Corporation, and Sony. That means your news, your entertainment, and even your "alternative viewpoints" are often crafted by the same high table elites. Their agenda is clear. When you control the narrative, you control the public's perception, and therefore greatly influence their decisions. Words are bullets. Now, the media giants have AI.

Add to this their growing influence over high-tech and internet platforms, and you now have a digital empire capable of amplifying, silencing, or redirecting thought itself. We're not just talking about algorithms. We're talking about creating public consensus and eventually behavioral control of everyone. Subliminal programming is real.

The High Table Agenda Defined

To put an extremely complicated agenda into simple terms: the High Table wants global control. Global control is a synonym for the New World Order, a phrase once dismissed as a conspiracy but now echoed in think tanks, policy papers, and speeches by world leaders.

The New World Order is a term used to describe a powerful, centralized system of global governance controlled by a small group of elites. It's not about elected leaders or national sovereignty, it's about unelected influencers, like the deep state, pulling strings behind the scenes for the High Table. Their goal?

To reshape the world into a tightly controlled society where individual freedoms are reduced, private ownership is erased, and every major institution, including money, media, government, health, and education, is manipulated from the top down.

It's global control is disguised as helping humanity. In short, a one-world government run by the few, for the benefit of the few.

When the global elites present their New World Order, they purposely leave off one letter, "S." It's the New World OrderS. They will implement many new orders, if they succeed, and the public will have to obey them.

The blueprint for the New World Order includes:

- A cashless society, where every transaction is tracked using digital currency.
- Digital IDs that will restrict our individual autonomy and freedoms.
- Climate regulations used as a weapon to consolidate control, restrict energy access, and justify hyper-economic spending.
- Ongoing dependency on big pharma, not for cures, but for profits.
- The erosion of national sovereignty in favor of international oversight by unelected officials.

The High Table doesn't want to occupy your land. They want to own your land, own your data, and profit from your fears, the fears that they create.

And the most dangerous part is that they're doing it in plain sight. Most people are too preoccupied with their own lives, making a living, surviving, to pay attention to the biggest threat to their freedom.

Fear, Power, and Total Control

There's a timeless truth that echoes through every era of human history: fear and greed rule all men. These two forces have built empires and also brought them to ruin. And in the hands of the global elites, the so-called High Table, they are wielded like surgical instruments, reshaping the world not for the many, but for the few.

Imagine, for a moment, that you're among the ultra-wealthy. You could spend $1 million a month, live to be 100, and still have billions left. You own a mansion in Beverly Hills, a chateau in the Swiss Alps, and a palace overlooking Monte Carlo. You have private jets at your command and chefs, doctors, and security who cater only to you. You can dream, but you have to eventually wake up and go to work.

The ultra-elites don't have to go to work. We all work for them. But even with all that power and privilege, there's one thing money can't buy: immortality. Even the elites can't cheat death. What's at the top of their list now? Legacy.

For the High Table, legacy means reshaping the world in their image and their agenda. That brings us to the most ambitious initiative of all: The Great Reset. The Great Reset was launched by the World Economic Forum (WEF), founded in 1971 and led by Klaus Schwab. It's a comprehensive plan to restructure global society, economics, government, and even human behavior, all under the guise of helping save humanity.

This is no conspiracy theory. The WEF's own website details it. At the core of the agenda is the idea that we'll all be happier owning nothing.

Key pillars of the Great Reset also include:

- Universal income is tied to your behavioral compliance.
- Mass surveillance to monitor spending, travel, and behavior.
- Government-owned and managed housing.
- A dramatic reduction in the global population in the name of sustainability. Save the planet, but for whom?

They plan to achieve this by exploiting crises, like the COVID-19 pandemic, which served as a global trial run for control. As someone once said of our government: "They never let a good crisis go to waste."

And what stands in their way? One colossal roadblock: The United States of America.

Despite its recent internal decline (until 2025), America remains the world's superpower. Economically, militarily, and culturally, it is the final domino. Not perfect, but the least dirty shirt in the global laundry by far. The High Table knows they don't need to destroy America, just weaken it enough to create equality among nations and make room for a one-world government. And they're doing it step by step:

- Undermining our history
- Corrupting our culture
- Dismantling our education system
- Protesting our religious values

This playbook isn't new. It traces back to Karl Marx, who, in his 1848 Communist Manifesto, laid out ten pillars for a socialist state. Many citizens today, especially those under 40, do not understand much about political science. Disturbingly, a lot of them believe socialism is a good thing. The poor are the most susceptible. Seven out of the ten Communist Manifesto pillars are already active in American society:

- Abolition of private property: The Federal Reserve indirectly now owns 33% of all U.S. mortgages and seeks to own them all. Check out holdings of BlackRock, Fannie Mae, and Freddie Mac.
- Progressive income tax: Codified through the IRS.
- Confiscation of property from dissenters: Via lawsuits, asset seizures, and ambiguous laws, as well as high inflation and interest rates.
- Centralization of credit through a national bank: The Federal Reserve is neither federal nor a reserve; it's private.
- State control of communications: From warrantless surveillance to digital tracking.
- Control of population movement: Burdensome regulations and high taxes cause people to relocate.
- State-run education to indoctrinate: Public education reflects elite ideology, statism, and erasing history.

Follow the Money Trail

On December 23, 1913, Congress passed the Federal Reserve Act, handing control of our money supply to private bankers. The Fed prints currency (not money) from thin air, loans it to banks, who then loan it to you, with interest at every step. Banks can lend out ten times their reserves, charging us interest and creating money out of thin air. Please research this yourself because it is really too hard to believe. To the High Table and their puppet banks, as well as the Fed, interest is the key ingredient for keeping them rich and us poor. In the past, the mafia had loan sharks. The Fed and its central banks have replaced them.

From there, it was a natural progression: control the media. Today, six corporations control 90% of the U.S. media, broadcasting the High Table's agenda, everything of what we see, think, and believe. When you own the press, selling the agenda is easy. Repeat a lie often enough, and it becomes the truth. Hear the song enough times and you will start singing it.

Then there's the open border crisis. According to CBP and internal DHS briefings, over 20 million undocumented immigrants have crossed into the U.S. The agenda? Overwhelm cities, destabilize economies, and secure a permanent political majority by allowing illegal immigrants to vote. Who will they vote for? The political party that allowed them in illegally. What is it costing you, your tax dollars, to support them?

Our only line of defense? The United States Constitution. But that, too, is under siege. Even though the Constitution is written in plain English, many ideologically demented attorneys and judges controlled by the High Table feel a need to decipher, explain, or decode it. The good news? Our Founding Fathers were brave, smart guys who wrote the Constitution in English.

The following is a list of some, but not all, of the methods and techniques the Global Elites have used and will continue to use in the future to accomplish their sinister agenda:

Abolish private property - As of 2024, the federal government and affiliated entities such as BlackRock, Fannie Mae, and Freddie Mac underwrite or guarantee the majority of U.S. residential mortgages. Though they don't technically "own" the properties, they control the loans, and by extension, much of the housing market. This centralized leverage allows them to dictate terms and policies, leaving homeowners more vulnerable to foreclosure. With rising inflation, job insecurity, and climbing interest rates, foreclosure rates are increasing nationwide. According to ATTOM Data Solutions, foreclosure filings were up 136% from 2021 to 2023.

The ultimate aim, some argue, aligns with the goals of the World Economic Forum's Great Reset, where homeownership is discouraged and individuals are converted from owners to permanent renters. The now-infamous phrase, "You will own nothing and be happy," has become symbolic of this shift. If ownership is eliminated, control is consolidated. Perhaps the title of this book should be changed to: You are screwed!

Media manipulation (Fake News) - To be redundant on purpose, because it's that important to understand, roughly 90% of all U.S. media is controlled by just six conglomerates: Comcast, Disney, AT&T (Warner Bros Discovery), Paramount Global, Sony, and Fox. This degree of concentration allows for a narrow narrative to be echoed across hundreds of outlets, shaping public opinion in a top-down manner. Investigative journalism and diverse viewpoints are increasingly hard to find. The phrase "fake news," popularized in mainstream discourse during the 2016 election, reflects growing public skepticism. According to a 2023 Gallup survey, only 32% of Americans have "a great deal" or "a fair amount" of trust in mass media to report the news fully, accurately, and fairly. The media has shifted from being the watchdog of power to a megaphone for the global elites, prioritizing political agendas, censorship, and profit over truth. This erosion of trust has profound implications for democracy.

Promote radical individualism (The Master Trend) - The Master Trend is a psychological and sociological strategy to isolate individuals by pushing selfishness and personal choices above all else. While independence can be empowering, radical individualism breaks down communal bonds, erodes families, and weakens collective resistance to authoritarian control. An army of one is no army at all.

Centralized food production and distribution - The consolidation of food production in the United States has reached critical levels. Just four corporations - Tyson Foods, Cargill, JBS, and National Beef - control over 80% of the beef market. Similarly, more than 70% of pork processing is concentrated in the hands of just a few major firms. This oligopoly (like a monopoly, but where a few firms control the market) reduces consumer choice, weakens competition, and creates systemic vulnerabilities. When supply chains are disrupted, whether due to pandemics, cyberattacks, or geopolitical conflict, the entire nation feels the effects. And prices go up exponentially. Additionally, billionaire investors like Bill Gates have quietly amassed enormous swaths of American farmland. As of 2022, Gates owned approximately 270,000 acres across 19 states, making him the largest private farmland owner in the country. Everyone should fear a growing monopolization of food sources that could be used to manipulate markets, prices, and even access to basic staples. Centralized control of food equates to centralized control of people. When access to food becomes a privilege rather than a right, the foundation of personal freedom is now in the hands of the power elites.

Trigger economic collapse through hyperinflation and interest hikes - In 2022, the United States experienced its highest inflation in over four decades, peaking at 9.1%, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. In response, the Federal Reserve began aggressively raising interest rates, with the federal funds rate increasing from near zero to over 5% by mid-2023. While the stated goal was to control inflation, the rapid hikes led to increased borrowing costs across the board, from mortgages to credit cards, pushing countless Americans deeper into debt. These boom-bust economic cycles are not accidental. They create a predictable pattern of consolidation where the ultra-wealthy and major corporations can buy distressed assets at a discount. Meanwhile, the middle class suffers the brunt, losing homes, savings, and access to credit. Wealth moves upward, and dependency grows upward as well. This orchestrated instability is not just a failure of policy; to many, it appears to be a deliberate mechanism for control.

Enact overwhelming legislation - America has over 4 million laws on the books, not counting local ordinances and administrative rules. This excessive legislation and the ambiguity of many laws make it virtually impossible for citizens to remain in compliance and leaves them vulnerable to selective enforcement. In the Tao Te Ching, a 2,500-year-old book on the philosophy of life, it was written: "When there are too many laws, the people will become lawless."

Control transportation - As of 2024, transportation policy in the U.S. is undergoing a dramatic transformation. Gas taxes continue to rise in many states, increasing the cost of mobility for working-class Americans. Simultaneously, government mandates are aggressively pushing electric vehicle (EV) adoption, yet infrastructure lags far behind. According to the U.S. Department of Energy, there are roughly 160,000 charging stations nationwide, far below the millions needed for widespread EV use. Under the guise of environmental sustainability, transportation could soon shift from a personal freedom to a government-managed industry.

Allow crime to flourish - Between 2020 and 2023, many cities experienced a dramatic spike in crime amid police budget cuts and reduced law enforcement morale. Major cities like San Francisco and Chicago have seen a lot of store closures, resident flight, and citizens afraid to walk the streets. Open borders and the flow of criminal elements into our country, as well as high inflation, rising poverty, and unemployment, are contributing factors. Also, let's not forget that the global elites want to bring down America a few notches to create global equality, as well as allowing crime to spike to create an excuse to declare martial law and call out the National Guard. More control for the High Table, less freedom for us.

Increase terrorism risk via open borders - The United States has experienced record surges in illegal border crossings in recent years, with U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) reporting over 2.4 million encounters at the southern border in fiscal year 2023 alone. Among those apprehended, hundreds were found to be on the FBI's terrorist watchlist, according to CBP and Department of Homeland Security data. This sharp rise in illegal entry places immense strain on national security infrastructure and creates a state of extreme danger for our country, our neighborhoods, and our families (until 2025). Critics argue that the lack of border enforcement acts as a magnet not only for economic migrants but also for individuals with malicious intent. Loose immigration policies can serve as an open invitation for bad actors to slip through the cracks, potentially organizing or executing attacks on U.S. soil. In an era of heightened global instability, the failure to secure our borders may constitute one of the most serious internal threats facing the nation. Once again, it fits into the elites' agenda.

Escalate drug inflow - Over 107,000 Americans died from drug overdoses in 2022, according to the CDC, with fentanyl responsible for the majority. Open borders, reduced drug enforcement, and synthetic opioids from China via Mexico have accelerated the crisis.

Indoctrinate children through divisive education - School boards and educational institutions across the U.S. have become battlegrounds for ideological influence. Topics such as critical race theory (CRT), gender identity, and political activism have been woven into public school curricula, sparking widespread debates and protests from parents and communities. These controversies highlight a deeper struggle over the purpose of education: is it to teach objective knowledge or to instill a particular worldview? Critics argue that many of these lessons substitute traditional civic and family values with state-endorsed ideologies, effectively shifting the role of moral guidance from the home to the classroom. As curriculum decisions become increasingly politicized, the concern grows that public education is being leveraged to shape future citizens into compliant participants in a pre-designed global framework based on the High Table's agenda.

Rather than uniting children through shared learning, the system is dividing them through identity politics and radical ideological indoctrination. Children in grammar school should not be exposed to the issue of gender identity, explicit sexual content, drag queens, or political propaganda.

Undermine the family unit - The traditional nuclear family, long considered a cornerstone of stable societies, is increasingly under strain in the modern world. In the U.S., the divorce rate continues to hover near 40 to 50 percent for first marriages, and birth rates have fallen to historic lows, reaching 1.64 children, a depopulation agenda in action. Economic hardship plays a significant role, with financial stress being one of the leading causes of both divorce and deferred parenthood. According to Pew Research, single-parent households, especially fatherless homes, are steadily rising and now represent more than 23 percent of U.S. children. Beyond economics, cultural forces also contribute to this decline. Popular media often downplays or ridicules traditional family values. When the family unit is weakened, individuals, especially children, become more reliant on external structures like the state. A fractured household is easier to influence, manipulate, and control.

This aligns with broader strategies that prioritize collective dependency over personal sovereignty. In the eyes of those pushing centralized power, strong families pose a threat. Autonomous, morally grounded households can resist manipulation and preserve cultural identity across generations.

Remove religion from public life - The separation of religion from public life is becoming more pronounced as churches across the nation close their doors at unprecedented rates. Once a central pillar of American moral philosophy, Christianity is witnessing a sharp decline, leaving a vacuum in its wake. In the absence of a unifying religious framework, the elites want to erase not just Christianity, but all religions and replace them with statism. Taking away people's faith and hope leaves them morally bankrupt and more vulnerable for the high table to exploit.

Expand progressive taxation - The IRS now receives expanded funding and authority, with over $80 billion allocated through the Inflation Reduction Act to increase audits, which have now been cancelled under the new administration. This disproportionately impacts small businesses and middle-income earners.

Eliminate the middle class - The erosion of the middle class has been a steady trend since 1970, with its share of the population shrinking from 61 percent to just 50 percent. This shift is driven by a combination of rising living costs, stagnating wages, and the growing concentration of wealth among the high table elite. As economic disparities widen, the gap between the privileged few and the dependent masses continues to expand, effectively creating a two-tier society. In this new reality, the majority are left struggling to keep up, while a select few amass ever-increasing power and resources, leaving the middle class increasingly marginalized and at risk of disappearing altogether. When the middle class is eliminated, a key objective in their agenda is to leave only the Patricians or plebeians, the Bourgeoisie or the proletariat, the Masters or the slaves. Which class will you be in? There won't be a choice. Mediocrity is the new religion to de-incentivize anyone under 40.

Handing more control to the U.N. - The gradual shift of power to international bodies, such as the United Nations, has raised concerns about the erosion of national sovereignty. Organizations like Interpol have been given increased immunity, sparking fears of foreign influence over domestic law enforcement.

As the lines between national and international relations get more conflicting, many worry that such policies undermine the autonomy of local authorities and create more external control over our domestic affairs. Also of major concern is the existence of the Blue Helmets of the United Nations police force here in America that have been given certain police and peacekeeping authority throughout the world. Remember, the High Table global elitists are multinational and have no allegiance or loyalty to any country.

Fueling international wars - The ongoing conflicts in Ukraine, Israel, and Taiwan have become extremely dangerous for us, with the global elites, through their control of governments, playing a pivotal role in financing and supporting these wars. By continuously funneling resources into foreign conflicts, these powers not only escalate tensions but also contribute to a cycle of endless war. Such prolonged military engagements result in crippling national debts, divert attention from pressing domestic issues, and create massive increases in defense spending. The military-industrial complex, owned and controlled by the high table, are the big winners. Also, the deaths of hundreds of thousands of soldiers on the battlefields coincide with the depopulation agenda of the high table.

Exploit pandemics - The COVID-19 pandemic served as a trial run for the high table, with the government leveraging the crisis to implement emergency measures that drastically restricted our personal freedoms. The rapid expansion of executive powers allowed for unprecedented levels of mandatory vaccinations and widespread lock downs, all under the guise of public health and safety. This shift toward increased control has laid the groundwork for future interventions, with the World Health Organization (WHO) now pushing for greater global authority over health emergencies. This centralization of power raises concerns about the erosion of national sovereignty and individual liberties. Also... more depopulation.

Promote abortion for population control - Over 930,000 abortions occurred in the U.S. in 2020, according to the Guttmacher Institute. Internationally, abortion is championed as a healthcare right, while subtly aligning with the elites' depopulation goals.

Create identity confusion and distractions - The rise of more than 100 gender identities across the country is a circus sideshow. This growing complexity surrounding gender identity is leading to confusion in our youth. According to nature, there are only two genders: male and female.

Culturally divide men and women - Popular media portrays men as weak and women as invincible, creating unrealistic and divisive stereotypes. These narratives weaken bonds and cooperation between the sexes. Divide and conquer. Many teens and young adults in their early twenties don't date anymore. They hang out in small groups. No dating, no sexual festivities, no marriages, no new babies = population shrinking, one of the top platforms of the high table agenda.

Stirring racial tensions - The deliberate cultivation of racial tensions has become a powerful tool in the country today, with race-based rhetoric from the media fueling division at every turn, from Critical Race Theory (CRT). These ideologies thrive by focusing on differences rather than commonalities, pitting groups against each other in a battle. By keeping society fractured along racial lines, the underlying power structure of the high table benefits, as unity becomes increasingly difficult to achieve and social cohesion weakens. Divided we stand.

Confiscate firearms - The ongoing efforts to confiscate firearms in the United States, from assault weapon bans to the implementation of red flag laws, represent a constant growing assault on the Second Amendment. These measures threaten the constitutional right to bear arms and empower the state to exert increasing control over its citizens.

Disarming the populace is not just about reducing crime; it is a critical step in weakening individual freedoms and consolidating governmental power, and thus the invisible government's power. History shows that totalitarian regimes often begin by stripping away the means of self-defense, leaving citizens vulnerable to authoritarian rule and further encroachments on their rights. Thomas Jefferson, our 3rd president, wrote that the main purpose of the Second Amendment was to protect our citizens from a tyrannical, corrupt government.

Total access and control of all data - The dominance of major tech companies and government agencies over personal data has reached unprecedented levels. Organizations like the NSA, Google, Facebook, and TikTok not only track your every click but also analyze vast amounts of personal information to shape your behavior and influence your decisions. Data, in the wrong hands, can be wielded as a powerful weapon of control and suppression. The collection of such intimate details about individuals allows for unprecedented surveillance, manipulation of public opinion, and even the targeting of political dissent, as we have witnessed in the past two presidential elections. The power of data raises serious questions about freedom, autonomy, and the future of personal rights in an increasingly interconnected world. This is one of the global elite's most powerful tools.

Rig elections through illegal immigrants - With over 22 million (or more) undocumented immigrants, there's mounting concern about voting integrity. Efforts to allow non-citizen voting in local elections have already begun in cities like New York and San Francisco. These illegal non-citizens will vote for the political party that illegally let them into our country. Your vote could become meaningless in time, creating a one-party system, not the Democratic Party or the Republican Party. The new party will be the NWOP, the New World Order Party, run and controlled by the high table.

Escalate civil unrest to justify martial law and encourage organized chaos - Civil unrest, whether through riots, violent protests, or orchestrated demonstrations, creates the perfect excuse for increased government control. As tension rises, the state responds with surveillance, militarized policing, and restrictions on civil liberties, all framed as public safety. Many protests begin with real grievances but are quickly manipulated into chaos that distracts from their purpose and justifies crackdowns. Behind the scenes, the shadow government, the High Table, uses unrest to tighten its grip and expand authority. Few know that under certain conditions, police powers have already been handed to United Nations forces. In the end, protest becomes a weapon for the very system it seeks to challenge.

Introduce central bank digital currency (CBDC) - Executive Order 14067 initiated the groundwork for a U.S. digital dollar. A programmable currency could restrict spending based on your behavior or political affiliation.

Grow the bureaucracy - The size and scope of the government have ballooned over the years. One out of every five people work for the government in America, either federal, state, or local agencies. As this bureaucratic monster continues to grow, so too does its insatiable appetite for control, extending its reach into nearly every aspect of public and private life. The expansion of government not only increases its ability to regulate and intervene but also fosters a culture of dependency, where citizens rely on the state for support, services, and solutions. With each new agency, regulation, and program, the state tightens its grip, creating a system in which individuals are less self-reliant and more dependent on government structures to navigate their lives. Bureaucracy becomes a self-perpetuating entity, expanding in influence and power at the cost of personal autonomy. The deep state is a cancer that must be cut.

Undermine or rewrite the Constitution - Some radical legal scholars and political activists have increasingly called for major changes to foundational U.S. law, challenging long-standing constitutional principles. These movements seek to reshape the Constitution, a document once considered the bedrock of American freedom, by distorting its original intent. Such efforts not only threaten to undermine the very principles on which the nation was founded but also pave the way for greater governmental control by the elites and diminished individual liberties.

The Green New Scam - Under the banner of the Green New Deal, elites have advanced the interests of oil and coal by publicly highlighting the shortcomings of renewable energy. By exposing the inefficiencies of wind turbines, solar panels, and other alternative power sources through media coverage, they discredit green technology while quietly securing subsidies and regulatory loopholes for traditional energy sectors. They are "lubricating" the petroleum companies with continued profits. This controlled opposition allows them to appear environmentally conscious while ensuring the continued dominance of fossil fuels. If 80 percent of electricity in the U.S. is produced from coal-burning plants, then all electric vehicles are not running on electricity.

Your Tesla is really burning coal. The Green New Deal is the secret back door to control of all nations. Who can argue over clean air and clean water, even though that is not the true intent?

Empower the deep state - Beneath the surface of elected governments lies the entrenched machinery of the deep state: unelected bureaucrats, intelligence agencies, defense contractors, and career officials who operate beyond public scrutiny. This network ensures continuity of the elites' agenda regardless of who holds office, protecting the interests of global elites. Through surveillance, covert operations, and influence over policy and the media, the deep state covers all dissent and steers national priorities toward endless war, financial manipulation, and population control. It acts as the enforcement arm of the global elite, maintaining profitability and power. Most all of the deep state work for the global elite high table, knowingly or unknowingly they serve, or they become... excommunicado.

In this chapter, we have explained what the agenda of the global elite's goals have been in the past and are now. Many of their methods and strategies to accomplish their control have been explained and exposed here. The High Table global elites are very patient. They know that it can take up to 50 years or more to achieve their agenda.

While one world government is not realistic or possible at this time, they would be satisfied with an all-powerful, totally controlled international world committee of nations that they controlled. They have already taken over the United Nations. The name should change to United Nations Against America. If they cannot destroy nationalism at this time, then the next best thing is to control nations. This is the main reason that they are constantly trying to weaken our great nation. They know Americans would never allow this to happen unless our very existence and self-survival were at stake.

As far as their platform to reduce the population by 50 to 80 percent, this perfectly ties in to one world global control and a new world order. Four billion people are much more easily controlled than the current eight billion, and only two billion would be a cakewalk to control. Through increased terrorism, new viruses, and continued wars, depopulation should not be that hard for them to accomplish.

The birth rate is way down while inflation and the cost of living are way up. You can now see how their agenda platforms are all connected and feed off and reinforce each other. If the world population were drastically reduced, then so would most resources we now take for granted.

The High Table elites would have an easier route to total control. If this agenda is not stopped soon, then everyone is screwed. We are not part of the agenda... we are part of the menu.

Who is the arch-enemy of the High Table? Who can stop them? We all can, united, with powerful leaders with the courage to stand up and fight... even after they get shot. So powerful, they cannot be bribed. Smart business people (like our founding fathers) with a track record of success, who want peace in the world and the potential for prosperity.

What leadership would qualify for such an impossible, dangerous task is common sense. If the mainstream media is owned and controlled by the global elite conspirators, and it is, and the media, of course, is going to promote their diabolical agenda, and they do, then their candidates should not be trusted.

Common sense. Their enemies will be our allies in the fight for freedom. Whoever they attack is a threat to them.

The threat to us from the High Table and power elites is real, but united, the threat to them from us is also real.

Remember, they can stop any one, but they cannot stop everyone when we stand united.

"We must, indeed, all hang together or, most assuredly, we shall all hang separately."
Benjamin Franklin, June 21, 1776

Chapter 3

PONGA PONGA

A slow death

50 CHARLES MATTERA

Ponga Ponga

There were three experienced hunters on safari in the deep jungle when they were suddenly surrounded by hundreds of local armed tribesmen. They surrendered and were brought before the chief, who informed them that they had violated the tribe's sacred ancient burial grounds. Despite their sincere apologies, the chief demanded that they be punished according to local customs. They could choose between death or Ponga Ponga.

The first hunter inquired as to what Ponga Ponga was, to no avail. His decision, because he did not want to die, was to choose Ponga Ponga. For over two hours, he was subjected to torture: being burned, having his arms and legs broken, being put in scalding hot water, and having several fingers and toes amputated. After all, the chief was true to his word and let the first hunter crawl away, barely alive.

When it came time for the second hunter to choose, petrified after watching his friend painfully tortured, he decided he did not want to die, so he too chose Ponga Ponga. After two hours of torture, he also was allowed to crawl away, still alive.

When it came to the third hunter, who had watched his two friends being brutally tortured, the chief asked him to choose. He told the chief, screw you, I'm not going to go through that. Just kill me. The chief granted his wish. DEATH... by Ponga Ponga!

Today, many of us are experiencing a different form of Ponga Ponga, which is still painful and causing distress and despair. Financial strangulation is a slow-death Ponga Ponga. It can lead to mental and physical Ponga Ponga as well. Just as the three hunters in the satire lost their sense of direction, so has America in many ways, but not by accident. The agenda of the High Table, a small group of global power players, has caused an engineered collapse of our culture and way of life for their benefit only. The system itself is rigged, doing exactly what it was designed by them to do. We are on a nonstop roller coaster.

Some of the most prevalent contemporary issues that affect your life, both directly and indirectly, due to the High Table's agenda are inflation, the border crisis, rising crime, civil unrest, the pending food crisis, the invasion of our privacy, our current tax system, and the looming threat of a terrorist attack, which the FBI says is inevitable.

Inflation - Ponga Ponga is Theft!

Our cost of living is increasing, but the quality of living is decreasing. Inflation is the increase in prices of goods and services, but rising prices are just a symptom of inflation, not the cause. Who and what causes it, and how does it affect our lives?

The Federal Reserve greatly controls the monetary policies and the inflation rate in the United States. It is not federal, nor is it a reserve. The privileged central banking authority of the United States is controlled by the privately held Reserve Board of Governors, which does not need the President of the United States or Congress's approval for its decisions, although the President and the Senate do confirm appointments to the board of directors initially, and they also receive an annual report.

When the FED prints too much money, it creates inflation and devalues the dollar. Why would they do that? One reason is that inflation helps the government pay down its ridiculously high national debt with money worth a lot less than when it borrowed it. They inflate away the national debt, but they also inflate away our prosperity. Since 1913, when the Federal Reserve Bank was created to today, the dollar has depreciated at a cumulative rate of 96% of its purchasing power. One dollar today will buy you a nickel back then.

Inflation is measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. They publish the CPI, Consumer Price Index, monthly. They greatly manipulate this to prevent panic and turmoil among the public. The measurements used to establish the CPI have been modified and manipulated 24 times since 1980 to claim a fake low inflation rate. At a minimum, the real inflation rate is twice that of the CPI. The simple way to measure inflation is by comparing your cost of living now with what it was one year ago. Inflation is a slow death. It is financial strangulation.

Inflation is really a hidden tax that has destroyed nations in the past. It constitutes the most repressive of all forms of taxation and impacts the poor and lower-income people the most. There are even different kinds of inflation. Wage inflation is when your paycheck goes up, but not fast enough to keep up with the prices of most things. There is also asset inflation, where home values and rents jump. Shrinkflation is when goods keep the same price but offer less product. Examples include candy bars, boxes of cereal, etc. Cumulative inflation is rarely discussed, but between 2000 and 2022, the rate was 86%. In other words, $100 in 2000 had the same purchasing power as $172 in 2022.

Inflation affects all of us because:

1. It lowers your purchasing power.
2. It erodes your savings.
3. It forces businesses to raise their prices.
4. It increases interest rates on loans for buying homes and cars.
5. It causes shrinkflation.

6. It transfers wealth from the holders of U.S. debt to the U.S. taxpayers.

By weakening our economy, the global elites weaken our country as part of their agenda.

Inflation is creeping quietly into every corner of your life. Everyone should realize that they are not just losing money; they are losing their economic freedom.

The Border Disorder - Strategic Negligence

Engraved on the Statue of Liberty on Ellis Island in New York, it says: "Give me your tired, give me your poor, give me your huddled masses." Now, we must add that "Give me your terrorists, give me your drug dealers, give me your human traffickers and those with communicable diseases, and don't forget child molesters."

The most immediate and critical crisis facing the United States today is open borders. It's not just a national problem, it's everyone's problem. It is by far the biggest threat to our national security. However, the government is reporting that our borders were closed and safe before 2025. We have all been lied to. There were over two million undocumented immigrants illegally entering the United States in 2022. This is not any conspiracy theory, it's a fact. That is what the U.S. Customs and Border Patrol has reported from our southern borders.

In the year 2023, 2.8 million illegal immigrants entered our country: it is estimated that 35,433 were felons, 598 were gang members, and 169 were on the terrorist watch list. Remember, on 9/11, it only took 15 terrorists to deliver death and destruction upon us. These numbers only reflect the people who were caught, not the ones who got away. This is one of the biggest threats to national security, as well as raising the question of the value of citizenship.

The total number of illegals in the United States is currently estimated at approximately 22 million people. That is about the population of all the state of Florida. These illegals will eventually be naturalized and given the right to vote. This is the reason they are being allowed in by our government. They will vote for the party that let them in illegally into the United States. This will create a one-party system, making fair elections impossible and destroying our democracy. Fifteen million new votes can sway an election. Sixteen states already allow the illegals to obtain drivers' licenses. A one-party system can pass any laws they choose, infringing on our freedom and wealth. The global elites are sacrificing our democracy and well-being for money, power, and staying in control.

Many of the illegals come in from Iran, Afghanistan, Libya, Syria, Lebanon, and China. Some of these countries hate America. How can we possibly know how many of them are potential terrorists when they are let into the United States without being vetted? Add to that the number of illegals who are not caught, and there is very little possibility that we will not have terrorist attacks on our soil soon. That is, according to the director of the FBI, on the question of national security.

Until recently, our government has failed us by not protecting our borders for political reasons. We now have a new administration that is fixing this as of 2025, after the failure and incompetence of the previous administration. It is going to be extremely difficult, expensive and timely to round up these 22 million illegal immigrants, but many people are very hopeful that this mission will be accomplished.

If we keep up this utopian globalism of wide-open borders, then violent acts of terrorism and an increase in crime in the United States are inevitable. The people responsible for this crisis are traitors to America. They try to B.S. and claim we need new laws when all we need is to enforce our existing laws.

Open borders are causing a tax burden on us, a sharp spike in crime, a ten-times increase in illegal drugs entering our country, a potential health crisis, a lot of civil unrest in our cities, and the biggest problem—terrorism in America that could one day make 9/11 seem small.

The Border Ponga Ponga is a crisis of choice by the High Table global elites. It is affecting everyone because of increased taxes to support these illegal aliens and straining our health care services and education system, not to mention the increase in crime in our communities. We must preserve our borders in order to preserve our nation. Until 2025, our borders were opened on purpose, flooding our system socially, economically, and demographically. When our borders collapse, the High Table elites will use it as an excuse to expand federal emergency powers, thus more control for them and less freedom for us.

Crime

The number one responsibility of the government is to protect its citizens from crime. Crime statistics and the cost to taxpayers have dramatically increased in the United States since 2020. This increase has been attributed to many factors, including the COVID-19 pandemic, economic hardship, and social unrest. All of these issues are connected and feed off each other. They are all part of the global elites' agenda.

Also, some states have soft-on-crime and no-bail policies that have handcuffed our law enforcement. Some states have significantly reduced the incarceration time for criminals, putting them back on the street to become repeat offenders with little deterrence if caught again. In California, stealing up to $950 in merchandise is only a misdemeanor (Proposition 47). If you are in business, these smash-and-grab robberies in broad daylight are frightening, not to mention the financial losses and increased insurance premiums. This law does not apply to corrupt politicians and bureaucrats. They have an unlimited threshold amount.

In 2020, the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) data shows that the number of violent crimes in the United States increased by 5.6% compared to 2019. This increase was driven by a 29.4% increase in homicides and a 4.3% increase in aggravated assaults in 2020 compared to 2019.

In 2021, the UCR data from the FBI shows that the number of violent crimes in the United States increased by 1.1% compared to 2020. This increase was driven by a 1.6% increase in homicides and a 6.4% increase in aggravated assaults. Property crimes increased by 1.8% in 2021 compared to 2020.

2022 UCR data is not available yet, but preliminary data from some cities suggest that the crime rate continued to increase. For example, homicides in Chicago increased by 26% in 2022 compared to 2021, and homicides in Los Angeles increased by 16% in 2022.

The following are some of the specific types of crimes that have increased since 2020: homicides, aggravated assaults, and gun violence have increased significantly. In 2020, there were 45,222 gun-related incidents in the United States, an increase of 35% from 2019. This increase continued in 2021 to 47,000. Gun violence is a major problem in the United States and is disproportionately affecting Black and Hispanic communities.

For example, in 2020, the Black population of the United States was 13% but accounted for 53% of all gun homicide victims, according to the CDC. There were 4.6 million victims of violence in the United States in 2021 and 11.7 million victims of property crimes.

Murder rates have seen an unprecedented spike nationwide, as much as 30% in cities such as New Orleans, Baltimore, St. Louis, Detroit, Los Angeles, New York, Philadelphia, Seattle, and Washington, D.C. Violent crimes such as aggravated assault, robbery, rape, and homicide have seen an increase of 4.4% nationwide.

The likelihood of you becoming a victim in your lifetime is increasing. Using a 20-year versus a one-year chart provides a much more accurate picture of the future. According to the Bureau of Justice Statistics, using this method at recent homicide rates, one out of every 10,000 Americans could be a murder victim, and 16 out of every 10,000 women in the United States will be rape victims annually, but the chances over a lifetime are even much higher.

These are estimates only, but the FBI believes that the far biggest crime threat we face today in America is terrorism. Everyone should be concerned about these warnings. If you view this spike in crime with the global elitist agenda in mind, it may be intentional to let crime run rampant.

A lot of crime statistics are meaningless or inaccurate because it's estimated that 46% of all violent crimes are not reported to the police.

Perhaps victims fear retaliation from the perpetrator, or maybe they just don't trust the police. Sometimes, as in the cases of spousal abuse or rape, the circumstances may be too embarrassing.

When parents will not allow their kids to walk to school anymore, and business owners close early for fear of robberies, and elderly folks won't answer the door, society as we know it will break down.

Under the globalist agenda of the High Table, fear is a tool. By allowing chaos to fester, it serves their end game: to justify a police state and even martial law. More surveillance and control of the population, and less freedom for us.

To end on a more morbid but humorous note, a good reason to have a small circle of friends is that three out of four murders are committed by people you know. Violence can be personal indeed.

Civil Unrest

Civil unrest is already here. The United States has been divided into two camps. It's becoming more deeply polarized: racially, religiously, politically, financially, and between the right and the left. If violence breaks out, no one will be right because no one will be left. The threat of political violence and civil war will increase as the 2024 election approaches. Divided we stand.

Look no further than Minneapolis in 2020 with the George Floyd protest and neighborhoods in Seattle and Philadelphia, the election riot protests in Atlanta and New York, massive looting in Baltimore, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. Looting sounds so much nicer than stealing. If you live in a big city, the odds of civil unrest increase dramatically.

How does this affect our lives? When there is civil unrest, especially in the big cities, the fear of physical harm and being a victim of violence increases astronomically. The cost of property damage is estimated to be over 2 billion dollars, according to the Insurance Information Institute. Businesses move out of your neighborhoods. The businesses that do stay raise prices to remain open, and our local taxes and insurance premiums skyrocket.

Some people will blame the COVID virus and financial and racial injustice for all of this violence, and they will be correct in that premise. But that is not everything at play. If you look below the surface, much of the civil unrest could be averted and diffused by the media, which is controlled by the power elites. Nothing happens by accident. Perhaps there is another agenda.

We saw, during COVID-19, our freedoms being restricted. When there is huge civil unrest, there are very few police departments in our country that can quell full-scale riots. The only alternative to restore law and order and save countless lives and property is to call out the National Guard and establish martial law. That would mean total control of the population and a loss of freedom. That is the elite agenda. The masses will beg Washington to declare martial law when people are being killed and robbed in their neighborhoods. There goes our freedom.

To quote Benjamin Franklin: “People who trade their freedom for safety deserve neither.”

The number of National Guard soldiers in the United States is approximately 450,000. Many have deployed overseas and can be deployed overseas at any time. As international tensions increase worldwide, as many as half of them could be deployed abroad.

Most people don't know (because the media doesn't want you to know) that the United Nations headquarters in New York, controlled by the global elites and High Table, has its own police force referred to as the Blue Helmets. The United Nations Peacekeeping Force has certain control of policing during civil unrest throughout the world.

The High Table agenda is to eventually give up our sovereignty to the United Nations during civil unrest so soldiers from China, India, Cambodia, Jordan, Serbia, El Salvador, Turkey and Russia will patrol our streets, not Americans.

There will be massive civil unrest when there are power outages, food shortages, political drama, or financial collapse. All of the Ponga Ponga is connected and promotes the agenda of the New World Order.

Civil unrest is actually useful for the global elites. When cities burn, violence runs rampant, businesses close, and chaos takes place, power is gained by the High Table. They will step forward to help by offering more surveillance, establishing curfews, and martial law as solutions for the unrest they allowed and orchestrated. This justifies their right to expand control.

The fake news media and most major networks, controlled by the elites, often promote and escalate conflicts for ratings and to help push the agenda. The greater the fear, the greater the opportunity for more control. When there is civil unrest and people are terrified for their safety, they will willingly give up their freedom for safety and order.

Terrorism

While inflation will eat away at your wallet and viruses will eat away at your body, terrorism will eat away at your life, and much faster. It can also destroy society very quickly. 9/11 was a long time ago, and it's hard to realize that worse can happen now.

With open borders, we are extremely vulnerable. Most people are asleep to this impending doom. However, the Institute for Near East Policy, the FBI counter-terrorist unit, and the National Counter-terrorism Center are all in agreement that the United States will suffer terrorist attacks in the near future.

ISIS and Al Qaeda, as well as other foreign terrorist organizations, hate America and have vowed to destroy us. Maybe we should listen to their threats more carefully.

The cost of the war on terror since 2000 is 8 trillion dollars and a loss of 900,000 lives, according to Brown University in Rhode Island.

Most people believe that terrorism is caused by issues of social and political ideologies, religious dissension, territorial disputes, and nationalism, as well as poverty. These are all major causes of action on the surface.

But a major reason for terrorism and war is that it is highly profitable for the elites. Sad but true. Most of the people who are on the battlefields of the world genuinely believe in their cause. They have been indoctrinated to believe whatever they have been brainwashed to believe, and they are willing to die for it. They are pawns in a global elite's global chess game.

Raytheon, Boeing, and Lockheed are top companies in the military-industrial complex. There are many great people working in the defense industry in these companies, and they are extremely valuable and necessary, but who owns these companies? The conflicts generate hundreds of millions in profits each year, trillions over the years. Peace is not profitable.

Jesus, Abraham Lincoln, Martin Luther King, and John F. Kennedy were all big advocates of peace. They were all assassinated.

In a country with incredible technology, we can land on the moon, send messages around the planet in seconds, split atoms, and have built an aircraft - the X-15 - that can travel at 4,200 mph. As of June 2022, we have over 3,380 satellites monitoring our planet. With all of this technology, it's tough to believe that we cannot find terrorists as well as the drug cartels.

Terrorism costs American taxpayers a lot. We can only hope it doesn't cost more lives.

The true terrorists of the world wear five-thousand-dollar suits and work in the highest positions of finance and the deep state, as well as corrupt officials in our government. What is needed to end terrorism is strong leadership in the White House. Peace through strength.

Terrorists who have infiltrated our country are not theoretical or a conspiracy plot. They are here in large numbers. Terrorism is Ponga Ponga by design. The globalist elites of the High Table will not suffer from any 9/11-type attacks because they fly in their private jets, can board their private yachts, and live behind secured walled estates with their own private security force.

The biggest terrorist threat to our great nation is that of an EMP. An electronic pulse bomb. EMPs are extreme bursts of electromagnetic energy that produce radiation capable of disabling all electronics.

The U.S. EMP Commission warned in 2008 that a large-scale EMP would result in 70 to 90 percent of the population of America dead in 12 months. If the power grid fails, you won't just lose power. You will lose everything.

So far, they are doing a great job. With the middle class gone, there will only be the very wealthy and the poor servants.

Please understand, to live in an advanced civilized country with the incredible lifestyle and benefits we enjoy, taxes are an absolute necessity, without question. It is the excessive corruption and government excess and waste that should be addressed by everyone.

One of the worst taxes of all is our progressive income tax (which is one of the platforms of Communism). Everyone should know that there was no income tax before 1913. It was sold to the public as a tax on the very rich, an easy sell, just to get their foot in the door. The High Table, controlling Congress, started it off as a 1% tax and only for those making the equivalent of over $95,000 today. No one complained about that. Why would they?

And so the global elites sneaked in the 16th Amendment to our Constitution, which grants Congress the power to collect taxes on individuals and corporations. Eighteen years earlier, the Supreme Court had ruled that the income tax was unconstitutional (Pollock v. Farmers). It seems the High Court was much wiser then.

In 1913, the Secretary of State, Philander Knox, confirmed to Congress that the necessary number of states had ratified the 16th Amendment. But this was not true. The 16th Amendment was not, and has not yet been, legally ratified. The Constitution requires that, in order to pass an amendment, three-fourths of the states must approve it. In 1913, there were only 48 states, so 36 were needed.

Facts:

- Four states rejected the amendment outright (Utah, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire), leaving 44.
- Kentucky, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Texas violated the requirements of both the U.S. Constitution and their own state constitutions by changing the wording of the amendment before the vote. This nullifies their ratification, bringing the total to 40.
- Ohio, California, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Minnesota never sent sealed and certified copies, as required by the Constitution, leaving only 35 states that legally ratified the 16th Amendment, not the 36 required.

The power of the High Table, the global elites, and the deep state ramrodded this through illegally. Good luck asking for all your income tax money back. It would take an astronomical amount of time and money just to get this before the Supreme Court, and it's highly doubtful they would even review it. Doing so would totally undo our entire tax system. Mistakes go unchecked.

One of the big problems and major flaws in our representative form of government is that our representatives are often representing their own best interests, not ours. And we are guilty too. How many new bills before Congress have you read? The bigger question is: how many have they read? It's their job. But many sneaky things are buried in our legislation, deeper than Jimmy Hoffa.

Concerning taxes

The most popular mantra for any tax bill is to claim that it targets the very wealthy (the same strategy used in 1913 to get the 16th Amendment passed). When the government talks about going after the rich to "pay their fair share," please understand they are not talking about themselves. Remember, it's their system, built with plenty of loopholes.

It's also important to recognize how legislation is labeled to mislead the public. When you hear terms like The Tax Reduction Act or The Inflation Reduction Bill, you can be sure of one thing: you're getting screwed. These bills are usually the exact opposite of what they claim, but they sure sound good.

Please refer to the chart at the end of Chapter 1. The High Table, global elites, greatly control our government and the deep state. They are the ones who created our systems of taxation not just for revenue, but for total control. When you sign your tax return each year, you are giving away your Fifth Amendment rights. Even if you are a model citizen and 100% honest, the tax code is so ambiguous that you can still be punished for an honest mistake.

Al Capone killed a lot of people, but it was his taxes that finally put him in jail. Murder was overlooked. But if you don't pay your taxes, you're going to the big house.

What are the negative results of our current tax system?

- It creates a massive database on each citizen, invading our privacy and freedom.
- It gives the sitting government the ability to attack anyone (even a President) for political or other reasons, because the tax codes are often vague and ambiguous.
- There are 24 hours in a day. Thirty-three percent of that is the 8 hours you work, which is being taxed. Think about it.
- You really have no say in how your tax money is being spent, even when that money pays the government, civil servants, and the deep state to attack you. In essence, you're paying for your own ponga ponga.
- It keeps us poor indeed.
- The total tax code and documentation is too big: 75,000 pages.
- Because of all the loopholes, the system favors the very wealthy.

What can be done to address the massive federal deficit has historically involved several options:

1. Increase revenue; tariffs, raising taxes.
2. Decrease spending; cut government, cut government programs.
3. Higher inflation. This "inflates" the debt away by paying it off with a less valuable dollar.
4. Go to war with countries that we owe the most to. This works only if we win. War creates extreme profits for the military-industrial complex. Who cares about the untold deaths? It conveniently helps with the population reduction agenda.

5. Create a new form of money. The Federal Digital Dollar, which is already being proposed under Executive Order 14067 (May 2022). When implemented, it would destroy our privacy and freedoms.

What can actually be done to create a 100% fair and simple tax system to replace the current income tax system?

A flat consumption tax (10% - 15%) has been proposed for a long time. It could eliminate the national debt in less than five years. The problem is: the High Table collects interest on that debt and does not want it eliminated.

The current income tax code is over 75,000 total pages (6,871 pages for the law itself). With a flat tax, that could be reduced to 10 to 12 pages, no loopholes, and everyone pays the same rate. Everything you purchase would be taxed, meaning people pay according to their means.

If someone wants to buy a new Rolls Royce for $350,000, they can easily pay a $35,000 tax. If someone can only afford a new Ford for $20,000, they would pay just $2,000. This system is predicated on eliminating the income tax and repealing the Sixteenth Amendment, which many argue was never officially or legally passed in the first place.

Everyone would pay their fair share and be happy to do so, without dealing with today's invasive, complicated income tax system. It would also save $80 billion in IRS enforcement and collection costs.

Another idea to reduce taxes but generate significant government revenue is to nationalize all gambling: lotteries, casinos, sports betting, etc., across the United States. This would eliminate much of the illegal betting and keep an estimated $500 billion within the U.S. economy, helping to pay off the national debt.

Three out of four Americans have admitted to gambling at some point in their lives. You cannot legislate morality. And while it may seem contradictory to give the government more control, this move would significantly increase revenue to strengthen the country.

So the question remains

Should we tax a man's labor; his hard work, or tax his discretionary spending and recreational choices?

The old proverb states, "When you die, you can't take it with you." The current tax systems and our government, led by the global elites, make that a very true statement.

In closing, the high inflation rate today and the excessively complicated tax system is causing us direct financial ponga ponga. The pending food crisis will be ponga ponga on our health and well-being, as well as life-threatening, especially to those that live in cities. It will create civil unrest quickly.

The triple-threat ponga ponga is the open border crisis, combined with the spike in crime and the pending terrorist attacks. These three issues are related to each other, are interconnected, and feed off each other. This triple-threat will cause physical and psychological pain and stress, as well as life-threatening events, especially the terrorist attacks.

Ponga Ponga is the result of the High Table Agenda (chapter 2). All of the crises we are now experiencing are not separate. They are coordinated, connected, and happening now, all at once. Inflation devalues the dollar and will lead eventually to a central bank digital currency, a major platform of the global elites' agenda. Inflation will make us slowly go broke. When you are broke, you are easily controlled.

The crime spike is also directly related to the economic hardship caused by inflation, and crime has gone up because of the border crisis. These issues will all lead eventually to civil unrest. A food crisis will definitely cause civil unrest and more crime, as well as increases in our taxes.

Lastly, terrorism, although relatively dormant since 9/11, will be the most devastating Ponga Ponga. All of these crises support and enforce their agenda.

The global elites and High Table are greatly profiting from the ongoing wealth transfer while our freedoms and wealth are being stripped away.

To prevent Ponga Ponga, please avoid being a victim of the Ostrich Effect. It's when people act like an ostrich that puts their head in the sand and foolishly ignores problems, hoping somehow the problems will go away. Usually, they don't. The results of the ostrich effect are always the same. When you put your head in the sand, you will always get your butt kicked.

Chapter 4

SILENCED SOLUTIONS

Innovation silenced to protect the elite

RESTRICTED ACCESS.
UNPUBLISHED WORKS & INVENTIONS OF [REDACTED].
DO NOT OPEN.
Daily Dawnmes
THE DISCOVER
HEY FEAR:

How Innovation Was Buried to Protect the Power-Elites

Some discoveries and inventions are so disruptive, so explosive, and so threatening to the existing power structure that the people behind them are silenced, sometimes permanently. Their innovations vanish, their names are erased, and their work is buried deeper than Jimmy Hoffa.

This is The Death of Discovery.

What follows are not conspiracy theories. These are the accounts of real people, tied to real inventions, with real names, real dates, and in many cases, real deaths. These were not secrets by design. They were revelations meant for the world. And that's exactly why they were crushed.

A lot of innovators aren't household names. They're inventors, scientists, medical researchers, and even government workers you've probably never heard of. Across history, numerous innovators have developed technologies and treatments that posed serious threats to powerful industries: Big Oil, Big Pharma, institutional medicine, and perhaps the most guarded empire of all - energy.

These weren't conspiracies. These were breakthroughs. But what made them dangerous wasn't that they didn't work. It's that they did it.

Rarely do you hear about the inventions themselves. Instead, you hear about the aftermath: the discrediting campaigns, the revoked licenses, the bankruptcies, the freak accidents. These technologies don't make headlines... only their erasure does.

The media promotes what it is told to promote and buries what it is told to bury. It's not about truth. It's about control. Ask yourself who owns the major media outlets - and what their financial relationships are with the very industries these inventions threatened.

As Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis once said, "If the broad light of day could be let in upon men's actions, it would purify them as the sun disinfects."

The sun never reached these inventions. And the darkness was intentional.

Many times throughout history, corrupt governments have hidden the truth... not to protect the people, but to protect themselves and the masters who helped put them in power. Politicians love to talk about transparency, but often their darkest actions are locked away in classified files and sealed vaults.

Fortunately, not everyone stays silent. Thanks to whistle blowers who have risked their careers, their reputations, and sometimes their lives, the public has learned about programs, policies, and misconduct that were never meant to see the light of day. Without them, many of the truths we now take for granted would still be buried.

Whistle blowers are not enemies of the state. They are defenders of truth. And more often than not, the more dangerous the discovery, the more brutal the attempt to silence it.

An example of a government secret that was kept in the shadows is the covert MK-Ultra program, operated by the CIA from 1953 to the early 1970s. This was not speculation or theory, it was a documented mind control experiment conducted on American soil, targeting unwitting U.S. citizens. Under the guise of behavioral research, the CIA drugged, hypnotized, and psychologically tortured participants to explore techniques for manipulating and controlling the human mind.

These covert experiments used powerful hallucinogens like LSD, as well as other chemical, psychological, and sensory techniques. According to declassified records, the goal included creating a real-life "Manchurian Candidate"... a programmable assassin whose mind could be hijacked and directed.

One subject was allegedly given LSD for 77 days straight-a chilling testament to the lengths they were willing to go. One of the program's own scientists, Dr. Frank Olson, died under suspicious circumstances after being covertly dosed with LSD. Official reports labeled his 1953 death a suicide, claiming he jumped from a 13th-floor window at the Statler Hotel in New York. But forensic researcher Dr. James Starrs later concluded that Olson had likely been thrown, not jumped. The details suggest a silencing, not a tragedy.

Many other test subjects suffered irreversible psychological trauma or permanent brain damage. All of this was justified under the banner of "national security."

And yes, The Bourne Identity doesn't seem quite so fictional anymore. The elite are not bound by moral or ethical lines when control is the goal.

In 1973, then CIA Director Richard Helms ordered most of the MK-Ultra files destroyed. A few survived by accident, misfiled in budget archives-including FOIA document #06760269, which later revealed parts of the program's scope and goals.

Why does this matter now? Because these experiments weren't conducted on foreign enemies. They were run on us.

And if they got away with it then, what else might they be doing now?

To further deepen this dark chapter of history, the CIA's MK-Ultra program wasn't just born from Cold War paranoia. It was shaped, in part, by the minds of former Nazi war criminals brought to America under Operation Paperclip. This post-World War II intelligence initiative recruited over 1,600 German scientists, engineers, and doctors, many of whom had served under Hitler's regime.

Among them were Dr. Erich Traub, a Nazi virologist and expert in germ warfare; Dr. Kurt Blome, who had experimented with plague vaccines on concentration camp prisoners; and General Reinhard Gehlen, head of Nazi Germany's military intelligence on the Eastern Front. These men, rather than being prosecuted for war crimes, were protected and placed into high-level research and intelligence roles in the United States, all in the name of "national security."

Their knowledge of psychological and biological warfare helped inform the architecture of MK-Ultra and other classified programs that violated human rights and ethical boundaries. It is one of the most damning examples of moral compromise in modern U.S. history.

Just as disturbing is the Tuskegee Syphilis Study, a government-run experiment carried out by the U.S. Public Health Service from 1932 to 1972. In this study, 600 Black men from Macon County, Alabama, 400 with syphilis and 200 without, were told they were receiving treatment for "bad blood." In truth, they were being observed to study the untreated progression of syphilis.

The participants gave no informed consent. Even after penicillin was discovered as a cure in 1947, it was deliberately withheld. The result: 128 men died, 40 of their wives contracted the disease, and 19 children were born with congenital syphilis. This remains one of the most egregious violations of medical ethics in American history.

And yet, history has a way of repeating itself.

Today, many express concern that COVID-19 and its response were used as a large-scale test, an experiment not unlike those from decades ago, only this time on a global stage. Vaccines were rushed to market under emergency use. Long-term effects remain unknown and many side effects are starting to appear. Adverse reactions, while acknowledged, are often downplayed. Critics of the vaccine narrative were censored, discredited, and in some cases professionally destroyed.

What else might these injections be doing? What long-term consequences haven't emerged yet? Are we expected to believe, without question, that multinational pharmaceutical giants and global governance bodies always act in the people's best interest?

If history teaches us anything, it's this: when powerful institutions are left unchecked, the people become the test subjects. And the next time it happens, it might not take 40 years for the truth to come out.

Another stunning government cover-up came in the form of Operation Northwoods... a 1962 proposal drafted by the U.S. Department of Defense and approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. This plan, never carried out, called for the U.S. government to commit acts of terrorism on American soil and blame them on Cuba. The goal? To incite public outrage strong enough to justify a military invasion of the island.

The details of the plan included staging or fabricating plane hijackings, orchestrating bombings at public events, and even contemplating targeted assassinations of civilians. All to manufacture consent for war. President John F. Kennedy rejected the plan outright. That rejection, according to many historians and whistle blowers, marked a sharp break between Kennedy and both the CIA and the military-industrial complex - what some now refer to as the High Table.

Within a year, President Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas. Was it connected? We may never know for certain. But the timing, the motives, and the players involved continue to raise serious questions.

War is profitable. And when our government and the global elites pull the strings to manufacture conflict, it's the taxpayer who foots the bill and the elite who reap the billions.

Meanwhile, Operation Mongoose, another covert program, was carried out by the CIA with the aim of overthrowing or assassinating Fidel Castro. The agency explored everything from exploding cigars to poisoned food. Despite dozens of plots, Castro survived. He was lucky. Kennedy was not.

In the shadow games of geopolitics, sometimes the point isn't to win or lose-it's to keep the public afraid, divided, and begging for protection. The enemy of the day becomes a convenient distraction, a justification for budgets, surveillance, and war. Crisis creates opportunity-and for those in power, opportunity means control.

One thing is painfully clear: if the global elite decide you're a threat to their agenda, history shows that your days may be numbered.

The CIA doesn't just eliminate foreign enemies. It has also been accused of targeting individuals who stand in the way of the globalist elite's agenda, all under the ever-flexible umbrella of "national security."

One of the most explosive and revealing episodes of modern American history is the Iran-Contra affair, a covert operation run by the CIA between 1985 and 1987. The U.S. government secretly facilitated arms sales to Iran ,despite an arms embargo, in order to fund the Contras, a right-wing rebel group fighting the Communist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

But there was more to the story.

As later exposed by investigative journalist Gary Webb, the operation also involved turning a blind eye to the smuggling of cocaine into the United States. This flood of narcotics helped fuel the crack cocaine epidemic that devastated American inner cities in the 1980s and early '90s. Webb's groundbreaking exposé, titled Dark Alliance, was published in 1996 and directly linked the CIA to drug traffickers operating in Los Angeles and beyond.

Not long after his investigation gained national attention, and intense push-back, Gary Webb was found dead outside his home in Carmichael, California, in 2004. His death was officially ruled a suicide by the Sacramento County Coroner's Office. But the report raised eyebrows: Webb had two gunshot wounds to the head.

Two shots to the back of the was ruled a Suicide!

Either Webb possessed an extraordinary pain threshold to shoot himself twice, or the coroner's report was as manufactured as the magic bullet theory offered in the JFK assassination. The coroner's office may as well have issued both reports.

People with secrets become threats only when they reveal those secrets to the public... especially when doing so interferes with elite agendas of control, profit, and manufactured crises.

Gary Webb didn't just expose corruption. He exposed a system designed to protect power at all costs. And for that, he paid the ultimate price.

Incredible Inventors and Their Secrets To Die For

In 1936, Canadian inventor Charles Pogue developed a carburetor that reportedly enabled his car to achieve over 200 miles per gallon of gasoline. The claim wasn't made lightly. His technology was examined and validated by the Canadian Automotive Trade Journal and allegedly tested by engineers at Ford Motor Company. When media outlets endorsed his findings, the Toronto Stock Exchange, heavily influenced by petroleum interests, reacted sharply.

Pogue's invention represented a fundamental threat to the global oil economy. Soon after the breakthrough went public, his financial backers mysteriously pulled out. His lab was vandalized. Government agents arrived. His equipment was confiscated, and all research was shut down under vague claims of national interest.

Was this about protecting national security or protecting oil billionaires?

The Pogue carburetor faded into obscurity, never brought to market, and the mainstream media quickly forgot it. But those who remember the story know it wasn't just about fuel efficiency. It was about control.

In response to breakthroughs like this, President Harry Truman signed into law the Invention Secrecy Act of 1951. This legislation gave the federal government the legal authority to classify, confiscate, and suppress any patent or invention deemed a threat to "national security."

In practice, that means any technology that challenges energy monopolies, military contracts, or pharmaceutical giants can be silenced... legally. Inventors have no say. The people never know. The innovation vanishes into classified vaults.

Today, thousands of patents remain sealed under secrecy orders. Many of them, we can assume, hold the keys to cleaner energy, better health, and cheaper transportation.

But when disruption threatens the profits of the High Table, innovation doesn't get rewarded. It gets buried.

In the 1970s, Tom Ogle of El Paso, Texas, invented a revolutionary fuel system that vaporized gasoline, allowing a 5,000-pound Ford to travel 100 miles on a single gallon at highway speeds. It was an innovation that could have upended the entire automotive and petroleum industry. At just 26 years old, Ogle was shot in the stomach by an unknown assailant, but survived. Four months later, he was found dead from an apparent overdose of 40 Darvon pills, despite having no known history of drug abuse. His death was ruled accidental.

Coincidentally, or perhaps not, his business partner, Jim Peck, the only other person familiar with the technology, also died. He was crushed beneath a car that fell off its jack. You could say he was “jacked off.”

Two men, two untimely deaths, and one vanished invention. And the pattern continues.

Rudolf Diesel, the brilliant inventor of the diesel engine, made waves in 1893 with his alternative to steam power. By 1913, both the German and British governments were pursuing him... two industrial rivals seeking to secure his innovation. That same year, Diesel vanished after boarding a ship to London. Days later, his body was found floating in the North Sea.

His invention lives on, but his story ends in mystery. The name "Diesel" became legend. The man himself became a cautionary tale. At least they kept his name alive on his invention. More than we can say for him

It seems when you invent something that threatens the wrong people, the future isn’t guaranteed. Only the silence is.

Stanley Meyer claimed to have developed a water fuel cell; technology that could use water as fuel to power a car. He believed it could end global dependence on oil.

In 1998, while meeting with potential investors at a restaurant, Meyer suddenly ran outside, collapsed, and died. His last words were reported as: "They poisoned me."

The official autopsy listed a brain aneurysm as the cause of death. But suspicion of foul play remains, particularly since certain poisons can trigger aneurysms. No toxicology screening for poisons was ever conducted.

What do all of these inventors have in common? They could have revolutionized transportation. They were all discredited, harassed, and ridiculed by government agencies. In the end, they were left impoverished, and in every case, they died under suspicious circumstances.

The impact of these losses is both personal and global. Just consider the money you've spent on gasoline over the years. This is money that could have stayed in your pocket if even one of these technologies had been allowed to flourish. Each of these men had secrets to die for... and tragically, they did.

These cases reveal a chilling pattern: when inventions threaten powerful industries, inventors are met not with applause, but with lawsuits, fraud accusations, regulatory chokeholds, and early graves.

In the end, every one of them received what can only be described as pure, calculated Ponga Ponga.

Medical Cures vs. Pharmaceutical and Operation

Most people today have never heard of Raymond Royal Rife, a remarkable genius and inventor from San Diego who was decades ahead of his time. His work had the potential to rewrite the history of modern medicine.

It's hard to believe that, after so many decades and billions of dollars poured into research, we still do not have a universally accepted cure for cancer... the second leading cause of death in the United States behind heart disease. Which begs the question: do they really want one? With an industry generating billions annually in research grants, treatments, and pharmaceuticals, a true cure for cancer would disrupt one of the most profitable sectors in medicine.

Now imagine curing cancer without drugs, radiation, or surgery, and doing it painlessly. There is compelling evidence that Raymond Rife achieved this nearly 90 years ago.

In the 1930s, Rife invented a high-magnification microscope - reportedly 60,000x magnification with a resolution of 31,000x. Using polarized and monochromatic light, his microscope allowed him to observe live viruses in real time.

Rife discovered that each virus, bacterium, and parasite vibrates at a unique frequency. By applying a matching frequency, what he called a "mortal oscillatory rate", he was able to destroy these organisms, much like a singer can shatter a glass by matching its resonant frequency.

Rife's most stunning achievement came in 1931 at the Scripps Annex in La Jolla, where he reportedly cured 14 out of 16 terminally ill cancer patients within months using his frequency-based device. A panel of respected physicians at the time, including Dr. Milbank Johnson, Dr. Arthur Kendall (USC), Dr. Alvin Foord, and Dr. Richard Hamon, observed and supported his work.

Rife's machine could reportedly destroy pathogens using non-invasive, non-toxic electromagnetic wave frequencies with zero side effects. His technology was also said to show promise in treating a wide range of other illnesses caused by viruses and bacteria.

Of course, once the media began reporting on these results, such as in the San Diego Union and the Los Angeles Times, the American Medical Association quickly took interest. Then-AMA head Morris Fishbein allegedly attempted to acquire Rife's patents and technology. When Rife declined, a smear campaign began.

Rife and his supporters soon faced fierce resistance from the medical establishment, pharmaceutical companies, and the AMA. His lab was raided. His equipment was seized. Physicians who supported his work were harassed and blackballed. Lawsuits followed, which Rife ultimately won, but the process drained his finances and shattered his ability to continue research.

While some critics have questioned the specificity of Rife's claimed frequencies for various diseases, few dispute the core concept behind his approach, targeting pathogens without surgery or pharmaceuticals. That alone challenges two cornerstones of the American medical system.

One thing is clear: if Royal Raymond Rife's discoveries were accurate, they would pose a direct threat to the foundations of the pharmaceutical and for-profit healthcare industries.

Rife died penniless in August 1971. His official cause of death was listed as a heart attack, triggered by an accidental injection of Valium while he was hospitalized.

His discoveries, like so many others, were secrets to die for.

What logical reasons come to mind as to why the global elites may not truly want a cure for cancer?

1. They want a massive population reduction, it fits the larger Agenda we've already seen unfold in other areas of global policy and planning.
2. The current system is incredibly profitable – ongoing research, endless treatments, drug therapies, and > complex surgeries generate billions in annual revenue. A cure would dismantle a major pillar of the medical economy.

Anyone who gets cancer today is faced with staggering costs and limited options. Get cancer, you are screwed! And in a system designed around treatment rather than cure, the outcome is often devastating.

Those who push for real cures... often pay the price.

The Suppression of Power (i.e. Energy)

It has been said that "Whoever controls energy controls the world." Energy powers everything... heating, cooling, electricity, transportation, communications, agriculture, and the food supply. Civilization itself is built on energy. And what do the global elites, the High Table, want most? Control.

Einstein is credited with the universal formula for energy: $E = MC^2$. In the real world, that equation often plays out as E (energy) = M (money) + C (control).

History is full of inventors and scientists who discovered breakthrough energy technologies that could have transformed civilization. Many of them died suddenly or disappeared without explanation. That's the sanitized version. In truth, many were likely killed. When trillions of dollars are at stake, and the status quo is threatened, the High Table does whatever is necessary.

Eugene Mallove was a prominent American scientist and vocal advocate for cold fusion and zero-point energy. He worked at MIT but resigned in 1991, claiming the institution was suppressing valid cold fusion research to protect funding for conventional energy programs. Mallove's commitment to exposing what he believed was scientific fraud made him a target. In May 2004, he was found beaten to death outside his home in Connecticut. Officially, it was ruled a robbery, but the timing and brutality raised serious questions.

Dr. Ning Li, a physicist formerly with the University of Alabama in Huntsville, was known for her work in anti-gravity propulsion and the manipulation of gravitational fields. Her theories extended into the realm of zero-point energy. In 2001, she claimed to have successfully demonstrated anti-gravity effects in laboratory settings. Soon after, she disappeared from public view. At the time, she had been working under government contracts with the Department of Defense and NASA. To this day, her work remains classified, and her whereabouts are unknown.

So the question remains; what secrets are being hidden in the name of national security? And how far will they go to ensure the world never finds out?

Nikola Tesla was a visionary inventor famous for his groundbreaking research in electricity and magnetism. One of his greatest ambitions was to provide the world with free wireless energy. Backed by financier J.P. Morgan, Tesla began constructing the Wardenclyffe Tower on Long Island to transmit power wirelessly. But when Morgan realized Tesla's work would make energy unmetered and unprofitable, he pulled his financial support. Without funding, Tesla's project collapsed.

Tesla died in 1943, alone and impoverished in a New York hotel room. One of the most brilliant minds in history was largely forgotten at the time of his death. The day after he died, the FBI entered his room and seized all of his papers, research notes, and prototypes. Many of those documents remain classified to this day.

Tesla's dream of free energy threatened the entire business model of the utility industry. Had he succeeded, the idea of monthly electric bills could have been a thing of the past.

So again we must ask how many world-changing ideas have been buried to protect profit and power?

Floyd Sweet was another researcher who made remarkable strides in anti-gravity and free energy technology. He created a device known as the Vacuum Triode Amplifier (VTA) and made significant advancements in the development of zero-point energy and gravitational control. Sweet and his wife were threatened repeatedly and warned to stop his research. His lab was vandalized and ultimately destroyed.

On July 5, 1995, shortly after two unidentified men left his home, Floyd Sweet suffered a sudden heart attack and died. Within hours, the FBI arrived and confiscated his notes and equipment. Like so many others, his research was wiped from public access. His work could have transformed transportation and dramatically reduced energy costs. Instead, it vanished.

Dr. Steven Greer, founder of the Disclosure Project, has compiled testimonies from over 396 military and government whistle blowers.

These individuals have confirmed the systematic suppression of advanced energy technologies-along with evidence of secret programs run by and for global elite interests.

Greer refers to what this book identifies as the High Table global elites as "the largest, most dangerous criminal enterprise in the world." According to him, the proof is overwhelming.

These voices... often silenced, discredited, or worse-continue to point to a clear and consistent pattern: when discoveries threaten profit or control, suppression follows. The truth isn't hidden because it's false. It's hidden because it's powerful.

One of The Most Secret Energy Cover-Ups

Currently, about 80% of the world's energy comes from oil, gas, and coal. Nuclear, solar, and wind together contribute less than 20%. The world still relies heavily on extractive and polluting energy sources, while cleaner, revolutionary technologies remain in the shadows.

Many have heard the term Zero Point Energy (ZPE), but unless you hold a Ph.D. in physics or work in advanced aerospace research, its meaning may seem out of reach. Yet ZPE is real. It is not science fiction, and it hasn't been for decades. In fact, it may be one of the greatest discoveries in scientific history; one kept from the public on purpose.

A simplified explanation is nearly impossible, but at its core, ZPE refers to the energy that exists in the vacuum of space. It is the residual energy present even at a temperature of absolute zero. In short, it is energy from NOTHING, or more precisely, from what appears to be nothing. Quantum physics has proven its existence. In 1948, Dutch physicist Hendrik Casimir demonstrated what's now known as the Casimir Effect - proof that the vacuum of space contains energy.

ZPE represents an infinite source of clean power. The implications are staggering.

Some of the most brilliant scientific minds - Albert Einstein, Nikola Tesla, Thomas Bearden, and Dr. Harold Puthoff, among others, recognized the potential of zero point energy. They believed that once properly harnessed, it could transform propulsion systems, replace electricity as we know it, and even influence gravity itself. It could literally rewire the structure of civilization.

But free energy is not profitable. And history has shown us what happens to those who try to break the chains of the energy monopolies. Inventors and researchers who have made credible claims of achieving over-unity energy or ZPE-based power systems have been ridiculed, sued, harassed, bankrupted... or worse.

Patent offices have refused to issue patents for vacuum energy or anti-gravity devices under national security provisions in U.S. Code Title 35, Section 181. Labs have been shut down. Research grants have vanished. Most ZPE-related patents are classified before the public ever hears about them.

The reasons are not difficult to uncover.

The beneficiaries of energy control-the global elite power structure referred to here as the High Table-operate through petroleum giants, utility monopolies, central banks, and the military-industrial complex.

Their system is propped up by the petrodollar, a geopolitical agreement formed in 1974 between the United States and Saudi Arabia. That agreement ensured that all global oil transactions would be conducted in U.S. dollars, thereby reinforcing the dollar's status as the world's reserve currency.

This system has helped keep power consolidated at the top. But it's now under threat. Nations like Brazil, Russia, India, and China (BRIC) are increasingly moving away from the U.S. dollar as its value erodes. For the elites, the loss of the dollar's dominance-and the rise of free, un-metered energy-is an existential threat.

Now imagine a world where energy is clean, limitless, and free. No more utility bills. No more gasoline. No more fossil fuels. No pollution. ZPE could usher in a new age of abundance. But it would also destroy the profit model of every energy company and destabilize governmental control mechanisms built on scarcity.

Energy today is expensive because of artificial scarcity and because of who controls it. Our dependence on oil, gas, and grid-tied electricity is sustained by a tightly woven alliance of corporations, banks, and governments-all answering to the High Table.

ZPE cannot be metered. It cannot be taxed. And once released, it would be free for everyone. Which is exactly why it remains hidden. Until that day comes, our electric meters will keep spinning and the profits will keep flowing straight to the top of the pyramid.

It seems there is a disturbing and all-too-familiar pattern that emerges whenever a genius inventor or innovator creates groundbreaking technology capable of changing the world. They are often met not with celebration, but with resistance, and sometimes violence.

They become victims of assassination, mysterious disappearances, sabotage, legal warfare, character attacks, and public ridicule. Their work is confiscated, often by government agencies, and their ideas are buried with them. Not because they failed, but because they succeeded too well.

Each lost invention, each medical breakthrough, each silenced voice, preserves the control of the power-elite. And each time, we all pay the price for progress denied.

Chapter 5

ON MONEY

What's in your wallet?

EVOLUTION OF MONEY: FROM TANGIBLE TO FIAT

The New York Times

GOLD STANDARD

CKED BY TANGIBLE ASSETS

FIAT CURRENCY

AUGUST 1971

NOT BACKED BY TANGIBLE, ONLY PROMISES

WHAT'S IN YOUR WALLET?

Currency vs. Money

There's a lot of confusion about what money actually is. This chapter breaks down what money used to be, what it has become, and where it may be heading.

First, a critical distinction: money and currency are not the same thing.

Money, by standard definition, is a medium of exchange that holds value and is generally accepted in payment for goods, services, and debts. Currency, on the other hand, is paper money issued by a government. For much of U. S. history, our currency was backed by gold and silver. That changed in August 1971 when President Nixon removed the dollar's remaining link to gold. Since then, the paper we carry in our wallets has been fiat currency. It is not backed by anything tangible, only promises.

Fiat currency fails to meet the full definition of money. To qualify as real money, something must be:

1. Durable

2. interchangeable

3. Portable

4. Divisible

5. Easily recognizable

6. A long-term store of value

Gold checks all six boxes. Today's paper currency fails the last and most critical requirement. It does not store value. It loses it. One dollar in the year 2000 now requires $1.82 to buy the same thing. That is not just inflation. It is devaluation. That reflects about 82% cumulative inflation, meaning your dollar buys significantly less.

Inflation is not prices going up. It is the value of the dollar going down. The dollar buys less because the dollar is worth less. And if a currency keeps shrinking, eventually it becomes worthless.

For over 3,000 years, the one thing consistently accepted as real money has been gold. Currencies have come and gone. All of them have eventually failed. History has proven this again and again.

Why Gold is Real Money

Hard assets like land, real estate, equipment, and precious metals hold intrinsic value. Of these, gold stands alone as a timeless, borderless form of wealth. Here's why:

- Gold is scarce. All the gold ever mined in human history would fit in a cube about 68 by 68 feet.
- Only about 20 percent of global deposits remain unmined.
- Gold is portable. A few rare coins can represent millions of dollars and fit in your pocket.
- Gold is durable. It does not rust, tarnish, or corrode.
- Gold is divisible and easy to reformat into any shape or weight.
- Gold is accepted worldwide and can be exchanged almost anywhere.
- Gold has a 3,000-year record of maintaining value.

- Gold is useful beyond money. It is used in jewelry and is one of the best conductors of electricity.

Some behavior scientists suggest that our fascination with gold may be subconscious. Its sparkle is thought to resemble water, triggering a deep survival instinct of thirst in the human brain.

Money is critical for our government and country to survive. In 1893, when the U. S. Treasury was dead broke, financier J. P. Morgan and the Rothschilds loaned $65 million in gold to the federal government. Gold saved the day, not paper.

Gold must be mined and refined. It is a limited resource and cannot be created on demand. Currency, on the other hand, is printed at will.

As stated, gold is real money- a safe haven for centuries.. BUT, the power elites have even figured a way to manipulate the gold and silver markets, when they sell huge timed paper gold contracts to tank gold prices. Most people believe the price of gold goes up or down daily but that is not true. It's the dollar that fluctuates against gold. The prices of gold is set daily by the New York gold futures market, controlled by Comex and the London gold bullion market, which are controlled by 6 big banks.

When the Federal Reserve(through alleged collusion with the futures markets) wants to strengthen the dollar, or when the Global elites want to drive the price down (only to come back in and buy low), they use huge billion-dollar banks like J. P. Morgan and Goldman Sax. The Comex exchange is referred to as a paper gold exchange, meaning they deal mostly in futures contracts, not real gold. It's convenient for the average investor to buy paper contracts, but for every ounce of gold contract PROMISED, there are 100 people who believe it is theirs. FACT: If everyone demanded the gold at once it would cause a shortage. Comex cannot fulfill their paper gold contracts. Dumping large amounts of contracts on the market drives down gold. Banks like J.P. Morgan have been caught manipulating the gold price, and in 2020, they paid a fine of $929,000 million.

The question in my mind is if they had to pay that much in fines, how much did they make on the fraudulent manipulations? Even the power-elites, when caught, have to play by some rules. So, while the average investor puts his investments into ETF's and gold futures, everyone that sits at the High Table, every power elite, has a lot of gold-not paper gold but real gold billions. China, Russia, India, and the U. S Central banks have all been buying up gold at record levels in the past 3 years. Perhaps they know something we don't.

The Currency Machine

Here's how modern currency is created: The Federal Reserve instructs the Treasury Department's Bureau of Engraving and Printing to produce new bills. These are handed out to banks. The Federal Reserve controls how much is printed, which increases the total money supply.

To balance this, the Treasury issues bonds... IOUs representing debt the public must repay. These bonds are offered to banks, investors, and the Federal Reserve itself. The Fed buys the bonds with newly created currency. This is a circular transaction based on nothing but trust. It is legal, but it functions like a Ponzi scheme, and it underpins the largest financial swindle in modern history.

In 1987, The head of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, Paul Volcker, stated, "When the Federal Reserve writes a check, there is no bank deposit on which the check is drawn. It creates money from nothing."

Once again, when people say gold prices go up and down, gold remains relatively stable. What fluctuates is the purchasing power of the dollar. Gold is the measuring stick. The dollar is the rubber ruler.

In 2022, central banks worldwide bought over 1,100 tons of gold, the highest amount ever recorded. They have continued buying at record pace. Maybe they know something we don't about real money.

To picture the size of our debt problem: One trillion dollars in $100 bills would stack over 1,000 miles high. Multiply this by 36.=36000, miles high!

Enter the Federal Reserve

To understand who really controls money, look back to 1913. During Christmas recess, President Woodrow Wilson signed the Federal Reserve Act into law. The Federal Reserve Bank was born.

Despite the name, the Fed is not federal, and it holds no reserves. Its main office is in Washington, D. C., but it operates through 12 privately owned regional banks. It is run by a Board of Governors who report to Congress, but they are not under its control.

The Fed operates independently. Member banks hold stock in the system, but that stock cannot be sold or traded. Why would they want to? Instead, they receive a guaranteed 6 percent annual dividend, totaling more than $80 billion a year. After that, any leftover profits go to the U. S. Treasury. Technically, the Fed does not “work for profit.” It just hands out billions to its stockholders every year.

The Federal Reserve controls the money supply. The real question is, who controls the Federal Reserve? Understand that the Federal Reserve is a powerful tool of the power-elites, but don’t think for a second that the “GLOBAL ELITES” don't have major controlling interests in international banking throughout the world, including China and Russia. Cash has no enemies!

The Evolution of Money

Before there were bills, bank accounts, or digital wallets, there was barter. The original economy ran on trade: chickens for spices, grain for pottery, goats for cloth. It was clunky, inefficient, and totally dependent on the whims of each party involved. You had to find someone who not only had what you needed, but also needed what you had. Economists call this the “double coincidence of wants, ” and it made early commerce a logistical headache.

As societies grew, barter became impractical. You can’t easily carry three goats to town to buy a wagon, nor can you chop a cow in half to buy bread. People needed something portable, divisible, and universally accepted. Thus began the long journey toward money as we now know it.

The first step was using commodity money - physical items that held value. These included salt, shells, cattle, grain, and metal. In ancient Mesopotamia, grain was stored in central warehouses and recorded on clay tablets. This was one of the earliest forms of accounting. In parts of Africa, large iron tools or even stones were used as currency. In the Americas, various Native tribes used beads, pelts, and sea shells,

But metal, especially precious metal, was the game-changer. Gold, silver, and bronze didn't rot, rust, or lose value easily. They were durable, scarce, and carried universal appeal.

The first metal coins appeared in ancient China, but it was in Lydia (modern-day Turkey) around 600 BC that standardized gold and silver coins were minted. These spread to Greece, Persia, and Rome. Suddenly, money was measurable. Trade became scalable. Empires expanded.

Rome, of course, eventually debased its own currency, replacing silver coins with cheaper alloys, a move that led to inflation, public distrust, and eventual collapse. This is the same thing that President Nixon did in 1971, when he removed the gold backing from our currency-making it fiat.

As trade expanded, carrying sacks of coins over long distances became dangerous and inefficient. Enter paper currency.

Around 800 AD, the Chinese pioneered paper money during the Tang and Song dynasties. These were essentially promissory notes, backed at first by hard assets like silver. They were accepted because people trusted the issuing authority. But that trust evaporated when the government began overprinting. Hyperinflation followed, and by the 1400s, paper currency collapsed. China returned to metal coinage.

Europe caught on later. In 14th-century Italy, merchants began issuing notes in lieu of gold held in vaults. These were the ancestors of today's banknotes... nothing more than IOUs. But they caught on because they made trade easier. Soon, banks began issuing these notes regularly, and people began to treat them as real money.

Over time, governments stepped in and centralized the issuance of money. Paper notes became official. Coins became of less value. The value of money shifted from private banks to national treasuries.

And that trust was the key. Money is not just metal or paper. It's belief.

As the centuries passed, central banks emerged, and fractional reserve banking became the norm. Banks could lend out far more than they held, knowing not every customer would withdraw funds at once. This created a system built not on wealth, but on leverage and illusion.

By the 20th century, most developed countries operated on a gold standard, where paper money could be redeemed for a fixed amount of gold. It kept governments honest, because they couldn't print more than they had gold to back.

That changed in stages. In the U. S., President Franklin D. Roosevelt outlawed private gold ownership in 1933, effectively confiscating citizens' real money and replacing it with paper. In 1971, President Richard Nixon officially ended the dollar's convertibility to gold. That move, called the "Nixon Shock", unleashed fiat currency in its purest form.

From that moment on, money was backed by nothing. No metal. No reserves. Just promises.

The dollar became a debt-based currency, meaning every dollar created was borrowed into existence with interest attached. To keep the system alive, more debt must constantly be issued.

The entire economy became a treadmill. Stop running, and it collapses.

This is where we are now. We swipe plastic cards and tap phones. Most people never even touch physical money anymore. Ninety percent of the "money" in existence doesn't exist in paper form. It exists as digital entries on banking servers.

Money has become code. Who controls the codes? And yet the illusion continues.

People still refer to "money in the bank" as if it's sitting in a vault. It's not. No one reads the small print when you open a bank account. The bank loaned it out the moment you deposited it. You became an unsecured creditor. If the bank fails, you get whatever crumbs are left, if any, or they can redeem your lost money in stock in the failed bank.

Today, we have central banks exploring Central Bank Digital Currencies (CBDCs) - programmable money that can be tracked, restricted, or even turned off. Combine that with facial recognition, biometric tracking, and social credit scoring, and you're staring at the future of total financial surveillance, and total loss of your privacy and freedoms.

The evolution of money has taken us from barter and beads to digits and debt. From cattle trades to CBDCs. From something of value to symbols of value to illusions of value. Each step gave more control to fewer people.

And the final step may take value away altogether.

From Receipts to IOUs

In 14th-century Europe, banks issued paper notes; receipts for gold or silver held in vaults. These IOUs were convenient and profitable for bankers. The barter system quickly faded.

Under today's Federal Reserve system, banks can lend out up to ten times what they hold in reserves. That's not cautious banking. That's legalized fraud. Many banks now carry "non-performing assets"; a soft label for bad loans, but it makes their balance sheets look good.

Silicon Valley Bank, First Republic, Signature Bank, and Washington Mutual have already collapsed. Today, over 180 banks in the U. S. are teetering.

The U. S. has had five central banking systems in the past. Four have already failed:

1. Bank of North America (1791 - 1811)

2. Second Central Bank (1816 - 1836)

3. Free Banking Era (1837 - 1863)

4. National Banking System (1863 - 1913)

5. Federal Reserve System (1913 - present)

History doesn't always repeat itself exactly, but it is a great teacher. The lesson is getting closer.

For more on the Fed's shady origins, read The Creature from Jekyll Island by G. Edward Griffin. It details how a small group of elites created a central bank under the radar. They succeeded.

The Federal Reserve is about as federal as Federal Express.

The Burden of Debt

The Federal Reserve is a private central bank that operates in secrecy. The U. S. government does not print money. It borrows money from the Fed, which creates it out of nothing in exchange for Treasury bonds.

That exchange generates interest, and that interest becomes national debt. Since the Fed was created in 1913, the U. S. dollar has lost 96 percent of its value.

As of 2023, the United States owes over $34 trillion. That breaks down to about $98,655 per citizen. The average American spends a third of their income paying taxes. A large chunk of that goes toward interest payments on the debt.

The Constitution says Congress alone should have the power to coin money and regulate its value. That power has been handed over to a private banking cartel. We are charged interest on every dollar we borrow, and that cost is passed on to the taxpayer.

When Nixon removed the dollar's gold backing in 1971, it was a turning point. Today's paper is not real money. It is just an IOU. Take a look at your wallet. Every bill says "Federal Reserve Note, " not "United States Note." That wording is no accident.

When you open a bank account, the fine print says your deposits become the bank's property. You become a creditor. Most people have no idea and are too busy to read the small print. That is what the Power-Elites hope for.

On all Fed Reserve notes it reads; "In God we trust" but God would not approve of the Fed using his name in vain, or to defraud us!

Modern Monetary Delusion

Desperate systems invent desperate theories. When a nation is drowning in debt, printing money like Monopoly cash, and losing control of its currency, it needs a story to tell the public. That story today is called Modern Monetary Theory, or MMT.

To put it bluntly, MMT is economic snake oil.

At its core, MMT claims that a government that issues its own currency can never go bankrupt because it can always print more money to pay its bills. Debt doesn't matter, they argue. Deficits don't matter either. Need a trillion dollars? Just click "print." Want to fund universal healthcare, student loan forgiveness, or a high-speed train to nowhere? No problem. Just add some zeros.

According to MMT advocates, inflation is the only real constraint. As long as inflation is "managed, " governments can print indefinitely. But who defines what "managed" means? And what happens when inflation slips beyond control, as it always does in this kind of experiment?

The theory collapses under the slightest scrutiny. If governments could print wealth into existence, Zimbabwe would be a global superpower and Venezuela would be a luxury resort destination.

History is littered with the carcasses of empires that tried this approach. The Roman Empire devalued its currency by cutting the silver content in its coins. France tried printing to cover its Revolutionary War debts and ended up with hyperinflation and famine. Weimar Germany printed itself into oblivion after World War I, and people carted stacks of cash in wheelbarrows to buy a loaf of bread. Venezuela printed away its energy wealth and now rations toilet paper.

Modern Monetary Theory simply gives a new name to an old con. The pitch is the same: unlimited money, no consequences.

But consequences always come.

Here's what MMT actually does:

- Destroys the value of savings: The more money in circulation, the less each dollar is worth. Your life savings? Diluted.

- Punishes the working class: Wages rarely keep up with inflation. Workers fall further behind while asset holders grow wealthier.

- Transfers wealth to the elite: The first to receive newly printed money benefit before prices rise. Everyone else pays more for less.

- Erodes trust in the currency: Once people realize their money is a ticking time bomb, they rush for the exits. Into gold, real estate, foreign currency, or whatever isn't printed on command.

- Expands government power: Printing unlimited money gives governments unlimited leverage. Control follows closely behind.

MMT is not economics. It's an illusion wrapped in jargon, sold to a distracted public. It is the fiscal version of a sugar high. The crash is guaranteed.

And here's the darkest part: the elites know it.

They don't believe this theory. They're just using it as a cover. While the public claps for stimulus checks and "free" programs, the architects of this delusion are quietly moving into hard assets, acquiring farmland, commodities, real estate, and gold. They're preparing for the next system while propping up the current one just long enough to extract what's left.

MMT is not a solution. It's a sedative.

It tells the public not to worry while the house burns. It buys time for the insiders to get out the back door. And when the fire consumes the economy, the same people who sold you the match will offer to rebuild, on their terms, with their currency, and with your freedom hanging in the balance.

The modern monetary delusion is a hallucination sustained by hope and B. S.. Belief keeps it alive, but reality will bury it.

And when that time comes, no one will be able to say they weren't warned.

The Coming Economic Tsunami

Every tsunami begins far offshore, unnoticed. A subtle shift in the sea floor. A quiet drop in the tide. The warning signs are there, but most people are too distracted or too comfortable to look.

Our economic tsunami is already forming. The wave is rising, and when it hits, it will reshape everything in its path.

Here's what's driving it:

National Debt: The U. S. owes over $34 trillion. That's $98,655 for every man, woman, and child. At current interest rates, the cost of servicing that debt is unsustainable. The more we print, the faster we sink.

Border Crisis: Estimated to cost taxpayers over $150 billion annually, and climbing. That breaks down to $1,156 per person. Strained social services, rising crime, and overwhelmed infrastructure are just the start.

Inflation: The dollar is melting. What cost $1 three years ago now costs $1.90. This is a stealth tax on everyone who holds cash. Savings are being quietly looted.

Credit Card Debt: Americans now owe $1.4 trillion on credit cards alone. With rising interest rates, defaults will spike. Many families are one missed paycheck away from financial ruin.

Consumer Debt: Topping $15 trillion, this includes auto loans, mortgages, and personal debt. It's a house of cards, and the wind is picking up.

The Everything Bubble: Stocks, bonds, and real estate are all propped up by artificially low interest rates and endless stimulus. These are not healthy markets. They are inflated balloons waiting for the needle.

Student Loan Debt: $1.7 trillion owed by a generation with stagnant wages, limited job prospects, and growing resentment. Many will never own homes or build wealth.

Foreclosures on the Rise: Over 185,000 homes were foreclosed on last year. As rates rise, more will follow. A housing correction is no longer hypothetical. It’s already underway.

Derivatives Market: This is the ticking time bomb. Over $620 trillion in outstanding contracts tied to just $220 trillion in real global assets. One bad day in the wrong bank could detonate the entire financial system.

Stock Market Overvaluation: According to Forbes, stocks are overvalued by 80 to 140 percent. This is not a dip waiting to bounce back. This is a cliff edge disguised as a mountaintop.

Banking Crisis: Over 3,000 bank branches have shut down. Depositors are being nudged toward digital-only systems. Privacy is fading. Control is tightening.

The End of Dollar Dominance: BRICS nations... Brazil, Russia, India, China, and South Africa, have already dropped the dollar in international trade. Twenty-one more countries have followed. The world is moving on.

These are not scattered issues. They are connected like fault lines. Pressure is building everywhere. Eventually, something breaks.

When it does, here's what could happen:

● Hyperinflation: If trust in the dollar falters, prices could explode overnight. What cost $20 today might cost $200 next month. Savings will be wiped out. Retirement accounts will shrink to pennies.

● Bank Failures: As default rates climb and panic spreads, banks could freeze accounts or limit withdrawals. This already happened in Cyprus. It happened in Lebanon. It can happen here. Remember, your deposits are technically the bank's property.

● Collapse of Confidence: Once people lose faith in the system, the system cannot survive. Markets rely on belief. If that belief breaks, so does the economy. The dollar could lose its global reserve status, and with it, our privileged position in world trade.

• Government Controls: In a crisis, governments always reach for more control. Expect increased surveillance, capital controls, digital currency rollouts, and possible limits on cash usage. Personal freedoms will be the first casualty of monetary failure.

• Civil Unrest: As people lose jobs, homes, and hope, anger will follow. History shows us what happens when the middle class collapses. Protests, riots, and radical politics rush into the vacuum.

• Wealth Consolidation: The elites will not suffer. While the public scrambles, those at the top will buy real assets for pennies. Land, gold, art, farmland, and infrastructure will transfer quietly from the desperate to the powerful. A comical movie prediction from 1979

“The economies of the world will collapse like a wet taco!” General Garcia (Peter Libertini)... 1979

Most people today will tell you that they are not concerned about a banking crisis or an economic collapse because they assume their money is safe because of F. D. I. C.-Each account is protected per $250,000. The problem is that this “safety net” is only covered by the Deposit Insurance Fund, which is only a tiny fraction of the several trillions in bank deposits across the country. If there were a large scale banking crisis or a bank run, the FDIC does NOT have the capital to cover the losses. FDIC insurance only works as long as not everyone needs the money at once. IT'S NOT THERE!

This isn’t fear-mongering. This is a fact. Historically, empires fall the same way, every time. Debase the currency, explode the debt, divide the people, and watch Rome burn.

The question isn’t if this happens. It’s when, and how bad.

If you're not prepared, you're a casualty in waiting. Understand the true nature of money. Store value in real assets. Get out of the casino and into the lifeboat.

What Is Money, Really?

Ask a hundred people to define money, and most will shrug, point at the cash in their wallet, or guess it's whatever shows up in their bank app. That kind of uncertainty is exactly what the system relies on. The less you understand what money really is, the easier it is to control you.

So let's be clear. Money is trust. It is belief in value. It is a placeholder for time, labor, resources, and risk. When you exchange money, you're not trading paper. You're trading energy, your stored work and your potential, your sweat and blood.

Real money holds value over time. Fiat currency does not. It is printed into worthlessness, losing purchasing power year after year. But the next version of money might not just lose value. It could strip away your freedom.

That version is digital currency.

Cryptocurrencies like Bitcoin and Ethereum were originally built as a rebellion against the centralized banking system. They offered decentralized value exchange. Peer-to-peer transactions. A fixed supply. No middlemen. No permission needed. They created a kind of financial sovereignty that hadn't existed before.

The blockchain technology behind these currencies was a revolution. People could move money globally without a bank, without approval, and without being tracked. Governments saw the writing on the wall.

So instead of attacking it directly, they did what governments do best: they copied it and twisted it. Now they are promoting their own versions - Central Bank Digital Currencies, or CBDCs.

They say it will be the future of finance. It will be faster, cleaner, and safer. You won't need cash anymore. Just tap your phone and go. No germs. No lost wallets. No privacy either.

What they won't say is that CBDCs are programmable. That means whoever controls the code controls the money. If they want your money to expire, it will. If they want to restrict where you can spend it, they can. If they want to track your habits, punish your purchases, or freeze your funds, they will have the tools to do it instantly.

So how will they convince the public to give up cash voluntarily? Simple. They will create a problem that demands it. Maybe a banking collapse meltdown or...?

Picture a viral outbreak that spreads rapidly across the country. Health officials claim it survives on surfaces, especially cash. They say your money is dangerous, a bio hazard in your pocket. A few people will have to die to scare everyone. The solution, they tell us, is to eliminate physical currency entirely. For your safety. For public health.

Paper money becomes a relic overnight. Everything shifts to digital. No more anonymous purchases. No more keeping cash under the mattress. No more opting out. Your taxes will be deducted automatically.

And once everything is digital, every transaction is recorded. Every dollar is traceable. And every citizen becomes manageable.

Want to buy organic food instead of plant-meat? That purchase may not align with your climate footprint. Want to donate to a political cause that challenges the status quo? Your account could be flagged. Make a social media post criticizing the government? Your spending might be restricted until your "trust score" improves.

In this system, money becomes conditional. It can be paused, redirected, or erased based on your behavior. It is no longer a tool you control. It is a system that controls you.

Most people won't fight it. They will accept it, not because it is right, but because it is easy. They will trade cash for convenience, ownership for obedience, and privacy for a payment app that always works-until it doesn't.

This is why you must understand what money truly is. It is not just paper, metal, or digital code. It is a symbol of freedom. It gives you the ability to act in the world on your own terms, not the power elite's terms. It buys you time to do the things you love to do.

Every person has a body temperature. 98.6 is normal. What a lot of people don't realize is that they also have a Financial Temperature as well. Your financial temperature is not just about money, it's a measurement of your success! A lot of our financial temperature is controlled by the High Table Power brokers. Check your financial thermometer.

Chapter 6

ON GOVERNMENT

"When there are too many laws, the people become lawless"
Lao Tzu

"Government, even in its best state, is but a necessary evil." - Thomas Paine

The Purpose of Government

From the first time humans formed tribes or built villages, some version of government has existed. Even the cavemen understood that they had to work together if they wanted to take down a dinosaur. The government's purpose, at least in theory, is straightforward: to maintain order, protect people, and coordinate and promote the common good. Without a government, you get chaos. With too much of it, you get tyranny. According to the Tao te Ching, a 3000-year-old philosophy text, "Always choose the Middle Path of Harmony" in government and in life.

Our Founding Fathers, Uncle George and company, gave our great nation life. They gave us the Constitution - the most important document in the world. Most people think that it is the Constitution that gives us our incredible freedoms and rights, but that is not what the Constitution does. The Preamble states our unalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

These are God-given rights, not man-made. The Constitution just clarifies that fact in writing. In a 2025 survey by the, only 28% of Americans have read the Constitution... the supreme law of the land. This is sad. The High Table Elites do not want you to read it. In fact, they would love to change it or eliminate it. It's a direct threat to their agenda. What's ironic is that criminals know and utilize the Constitution all the time to stay out of jail. Most can quote the 4th and 5th amendments by heart.

It may seem that we are sometimes criticizing our government, but that is not the intention. We have the greatest government in the world, but sometimes not the greatest politicians running it. The vehicle is great, but sometimes the drivers suck. What is needed is a critique of what our government was, has become and what it should be. It is a necessary system that has grown too big, sometimes corrupt, and too often hostile to the very people it claims to serve. Our public servants are now our masters. This must be corrected soon and it will be on the right path, with the right leadership in place and more participation and attention from all of us.

In the United States, we are told we live in a democracy. That's not technically correct. America is a Constitutional Republic. We elect representatives who are supposed to make decisions on our behalf. It's a good system in theory, until those representatives stop representing the people and start representing themselves, and answering to donors, lobbyists, and the invisible government (the High Table).

So, why does it feel like we no longer control our government? Because in many ways, we don't. The high table does to a great extent - indirectly. Only with a strong powerful leadership can we stop the corruption. The direct enemy of the High Table is the Freedom Fighters of America. Please join soon. There are many patriots both inside our government and outside it that keeps our government on the tracks. The global elites have no allegiance to our government or country. They utilize the deep state and corrupt politicians to maintain a certain degree of control.

The Power Behind the Curtain

A growing number of our elected officials are no longer loyal to their constituents. Their loyalty often lies with the people and organizations that control major media networks, owned by just a handful of conglomerates that control what the public sees, hears, and talks about. A candidate can be built or destroyed in 30 seconds with selective editing and clever scripting. The media can make a war criminal look like a saint, or turn a patriot into a public enemy. They can even make Mother Teresa look like the Anti Christ.

This isn't accidental. It's strategic.

Elections are sold like Super Bowl commercials. Policies are replaced by campaign slogans. Authenticity is drowned out by stage lighting and celebrity endorsements. The candidate with the best policy ideas often loses to the one with the best ra-ra team... and the most money in their war chest.

In these times, the people rarely get what they vote for. They get what the elites have chosen to put on the menu, but what looks good and sounds good on the menu doesn't always taste good and is hard to digest.

A Global Menu of Government Models

Across the globe, we see many different types of government. These include monarchies, theocracies, democracies, aristocracies, oligarchies, totalitarian regimes, dictatorships, and communist states.

But if you strip away the labels, most governments fall into one of two categories:

1. Those that protect their citizens and allow personal freedom.

2. Those that don't.

You can have a king who genuinely loves his people and rules wisely, like King Solomon or modern-day King Jigme of Bhutan. Or you can have a democracy that spies on its citizens, censors speech, and sells out to corporate interests. Then, the common good isn't that common anymore.

The form of government sometimes matters less than who is in control and whether power is restrained. Size does matter, but not always in a positive manner. Bigger is not better.

For example, Singapore under Lee Kuan Yew was technically a benevolent autocracy. He cleaned up corruption, imposed strict laws, and turned a poverty-stricken port into a thriving global economy. Also, on the short list of benevolent dictators was Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia. Smaller ships, and planes are much faster and have much better maneuverability. Same with governments. Time to cut.

Contrast that with North Korea, a full-blown dictatorship, where the people are starving, cut off from the world, and live in fear of saying the wrong thing.

America has been a beacon of liberty - the shining city on the hill for over 240 years. But freedom should not be taken for granted. It is a fire that needs tending. And lately, we've been leaving the kindling in the hands of arsonists. The same fire that can heat your home can also burn it down. Again, it's not our system that's bad, or our government - it's the politicians controlled by the global elite's high table that promote their diabolical agenda.

The Illusion of Democracy

People love to say that democracy is fair because "majority rules." But what happens when 51 percent vote to take away the rights of the other 49 percent? Right now in history, our great nation is unfortunately divided down the middle. You can believe this is because of a natural division of viewpoints. Or you can believe this divide was caused, planned, and designed on purpose to give more control over to the power elite. A house divided can not stand distractions. Crises. Manufactured drama. Identity politics, racial tension, class warfare... DISTRACTIONS, all designed to keep us divided, and to keep the government unaccountable.

As someone once said, democracy is two wolves and a lamb voting on what's for dinner. In that scenario, the lamb always loses.

This is why the U.S. was designed as a Republic. The Constitution was meant to protect the individual from harm and from government overreach. That system has worked for a long time, and will continue to with the right leadership and attention from us all.

When congressional seats go to the highest bidder, and elections cost billions of dollars, democracy becomes just another commodity. The average citizen is left helpless and alone (you are powerless alone) while lobbyists deliver the policies of the global elites to the people they paid to elect.

The Machinery of Government

The U.S. government is divided into three branches. The 3 branches of our Government are:

1. Legislative - Congress: House (435 members) and Senate (100 members)

2. Judicial - the courts

3. Executive - the President and federal agencies

These were designed to act as a system of checks and balances. There seems to be a lot of checks written, but not so much balance. Hence, we have a 36 trillion dollar deficit! Every single person in the U. S. A. owes approximately $106,102 of this debt.

No business could run like our congress runs our country financially. No one could even run a household this way without declaring bankruptcy.

Of the 3 branches of government, one branch makes the laws, one interprets them and one enforces them.

The Legislative Branch passes hundreds of new laws every session. Many of them are unread, rushed, and written in vague legalese. Some are vital. Many are useless. All of them end up costing you money. It's no coincidence that these laws are called bills. They usually lead to a bill... for us!

We now have more than 3,000 federal crimes on the books. That doesn't include state laws, local ordinances, and regulatory violations. Meanwhile, basic laws already in place often go unenforced. The law-abiding get burdened, while the lawless are sometimes ignored or protected.

The Judicial Branch is tasked with interpreting laws. In theory, this means applying the Constitution. In practice, it often means rewriting the law from the bench.

Judges have immense power. Some wield it wisely. Others abuse it with arrogance. Judges wear black robes like the Grim Reaper or Darth Vader because many times they have life and death consequences on our lives. Courtroom outcomes are increasingly political. Wealth, influence, and connections often matter more than justice. The only justice in the halls of justice is in the halls.

Many Americans have, unfortunately, been involved in a case where a judge's ruling made no sense; legally or morally. And in the rare moments when those judges are challenged, they are often protected by layers of bureaucratic insulation. There is no real mechanism to hold them accountable short of impeachment, which almost never happens.

The Executive Branch enforces the law and manages foreign policy. The President is also the commander-in-chief of the military. The founding fathers wisely kept the military under civilian control. But today, that office is bloated with bureaucracies and departments that often overlap, overreach, and overcharge.

Some agencies serve important roles. Others exist purely for political loyalty - rewarding the deep state for their patronage. The government employs close to 20 percent of the U. S. workforce. This is not lean governance. It is a giant, expensive BUSINESS that feeds on our taxes. Our federal government has grown like a cancer in the past few decades. It is TOO BIG and must be cut by at least 50%. A lot of functions in Washington could best be delegated to each state, such as the department of education and emergency services that could respond to a crisis in that state much faster and more efficiently than Washington can.

Bureaucracy: The Empire of Clock Watchers

There are so many great government workers that keep our great nation on track. The vast majority are honest, dedicated, hard working Americans... and then there are the clock watchers. Their nicknames are; Everybody, Somebody, Anybody, and Nobody. Sometimes when there is an important job to get done, here is what happens; Everybody is sure that Somebody will do it. Anybody could do it, but nobody did it. Somebody got angry because it is everybody's job. Everybody thought that anybody could do it, but nobody realized that everybody would not do it. It ended up that everybody blamed somebody when nobody did what anybody could have done... and nobody got fired! Everybody should have been fired.

Many government jobs are critical; teachers, first responders, engineers, and analysts. But the system also contains layers of unnecessary middle managers, administrative assistants, "diversity coordinators," and endless subcommittees.

There are people in government who collect a full paycheck while doing nothing more than attending Zoom meetings and watching the clock. Some don't even do that.

These are what comedian George Carlin once called "Tony Soprano jobs"... positions where no one shows up and no one asks why.

This isn't just a waste of money. It's slowing down America with dead weight.

Ask any small business owner how hard it is to navigate government paperwork: permits, licenses, audits, codes, taxes.

It's death by a thousand forms-paper-cuts ponga ponga. Precious time lost. Meanwhile, the people who enforce those rules don't always understand them either, as many are ambiguous.

Waste and Theft

The influence of the High Table elites with the theft of our tax revenue in all 3 levels of government, federal, state, and local, cannot be overlooked any longer. We, the people, owe 36 trillion dollars. Most waste has been at the Federal level, where the budget is much bigger and the oversight is much smaller. The level of theft and waste varies among different administrations. The new administration (in 2025) seems to be exposing the excessive waste that our politicians in Congress have spent like drunken sailors, with the help and support of the deep state. There is a direct disconnect by Congress as to the value of money spent. After all, it's not their money. This free money is used by the high table to grease their machine. Some unbelievable expenditures that our congress has allocated:

- 2.1 million dollars for a study on how to encourage Ethiopians to wear shoes
- 30 Billion dollars that was lost to fraud of Covid relief funds
- $465,000 to study mice binge drinking alcohol
- 2.5 million on a grant to study improving the self esteem of obese lesbian women
- $98,000 to research the endurance of lizards on small treadmills
- 3 million dollars to research the aggression of hamsters on steroids
- $120 million dollars on unused and then abandoned IRS software
- $3.4 million dollars for turtle tunnels under highways
- 2 million dollars grant to China to teach their sex workers/prostitutes how to drink responsibly
- 15 billion dollars per year in unused government office space (as reported from Citizens Against Government Waste & GAO reports)

It is just so absurd that our Congress would allow total misuse of our tax dollars. This is but a very tiny sample of the abuse.

Rule by Regulation

In the last few decades, a quiet shift has taken place in how laws are made and enforced in the United States. Instead of elected representatives in Congress debating and passing legislation, much of the real power has slipped into the hands of unelected bureaucrats operating within federal agencies. Agencies like the EPA, IRS, CDC, and FDA now issue regulations that carry the full weight of law, without a single vote from Congress, and without public accountability. This is called regulatory overreach.

These rules are often posted in the Federal Register, the government's official bulletin board for regulatory activity. It's a dense, technical publication that most Americans have never read. But what's buried in its pages affects everything from what kind of fuel your car can use, to how farmers can use their land, to what can be prescribed at your local pharmacy. Many of these rules are enforced with stiff penalties, including fines, seizure of property, and even criminal prosecution. The public rarely gets a say, and Congress usually looks the other way. Challenging these rules takes years and often hundreds of thousands of dollars in legal fees. Most people can't afford that. So they comply, or they shut down. Or sometimes they just go quietly into the night. And we the people get screwed!

In theory, the 1946 Administrative Procedure Act was meant to keep this process transparent. It requires agencies to provide public notice and allow time for comments before finalizing new rules. But in practice, the system has been gamed. Rules are often rushed through, published in legal language that few can decipher, and enforced before anyone realizes what changed. Challenging one of these rules in court can cost hundreds of thousands of dollars and take years to resolve. Most people don't have the time, money, or legal firepower to fight back, so they comply, shut down, or quietly fade away.

This is not how the American government was supposed to work. The Constitution gives Congress the power to make laws, not to delegate that responsibility to unelected agency heads. But over time, Congress has gladly handed off that power. It's a political convenience... letting agencies issue controversial or burdensome rules gives lawmakers plausible deniability. They don't have to take the heat from voters. They can simply blame "the regulators."

There are those who are trying to wind down this out of control system. But the regulatory state won't unwind itself overnight.

There are still over 400 federal agencies, commissions, and departments churning out thousands of pages of rules every year. These rules impact housing, energy, banking, medicine, transportation, education, and virtually every corner of daily life. Most of it happens quietly, buried behind the scenes - invisible unless you're the one being targeted.

This is how control expands: not with tanks in the street, but with policies in the fine print. Power shifts not through revolution, but through regulation. Gradually. Relentlessly. And unless it's confronted, it will keep marching forward under the cover of legal procedure and bureaucratic necessity with no vote, no debate, and no exit.

The Business of Politics

Politics in America is no longer about public service. It's about performance and sales. Candidates market themselves like products. First, they pitch to donors and political action committees, promising access, favors, and future influence. Then they turn to voters, selling idealized versions of themselves with polished slogans, photo ops, and speeches written by staffers and consultants. The public gets the campaign version. The real deals happen behind closed doors.

There's no formal training to become a politician. No licensing exam, no required coursework in law, economics, or constitutional governance. While many politicians do have college degrees - often in political science or law - a degree alone doesn't guarantee competence. And judging by some of their actions once in office, it's fair to wonder if the "B.S." in Bachelor of Science stands for something else entirely.

Imagine hiring an unlicensed contractor to rebuild your house. Or letting someone with no medical training operate on your child. Most of us wouldn't take that risk.

Yet we routinely hand over the levers of the largest economy, the most powerful military, and the most complex government system on earth to individuals whose main qualification is charisma and the ability to win a popularity contest. We all know who these people are in office today and the recent past.

Some go into politics with good intentions. They want to make a difference, fix broken systems, or serve their communities. Others seek power, influence, or a book deal. A few are chasing legacy. But the system itself doesn't reward honesty or competence. It rewards loyalty to the machine. The better you play the game... raise money, follow the party line, avoid real answers... the higher you rise.

Campaigns now cost millions, even billions at the national level. That money doesn't come from average voters. It comes from corporate donors, tech giants, lobbyists, labor unions, hedge funds, and foreign interests with U. S.-based subsidiaries. Every check written is a chip cashed later. Legislation isn't just written by lawmakers anymore; it's often drafted by industry lawyers, think tanks, and advocacy groups pushing private agendas through public channels.

It's no surprise that the revolving door between Congress and K Street (the epicenter of lobbying in Washington) spins endlessly. Lawmakers retire and immediately take high-paying jobs as lobbyists, consultants, or board members for the same industries they were supposed to regulate. That's not a bug in the system... that's the business model.

Yes, there are patriots in public service. There are also parasites. The system attracts both. And the longer we confuse politics with leadership, the more we'll be governed by performers, and not problem solvers.

Money, Media, and Manufactured Consent

As discussed earlier, the media landscape in the United States is dominated by a handful of corporations. As of 2020, six conglomerates... AT&T, CBS, Comcast, Disney, News Corp, and Viacom, controlled approximately 90% of American media outlets. This concentration of ownership allows these entities to shape narratives, elevate preferred political candidates, and marginalize others.

The 2024 U.S. election cycle was the most expensive in history, with total spending reaching nearly $16 billion across presidential, congressional, and local races. Specifically, the presidential race alone accounted for approximately $5.5 billion of this total.

To put this in perspective, this amount surpasses the annual military budgets of many countries.

The President of the United States earns an annual salary of $400,000, a figure that has remained unchanged since 2001. It's evident that individuals and entities don't invest billions into political campaigns for the presidential salary. The real incentives lie in the power to influence policy, control regulations, and steer economic and military decisions. And these investors expect significant returns on their investments.

A substantial portion of campaign funding comes from billionaires, hedge funds, corporations, and political action committees (PACs), many of which are the High Table. In the 2024 election cycle, just 100 billionaire families contributed a record-breaking $2.6 billion, more than double their contributions in the 2020 cycle. These contributions are strategic investments aimed at shaping policies and decisions in favor of the donors' interests.

The United States operates under a two-party system dominated by Democrats and Republicans. While they present differing platforms, both parties rely heavily on substantial financial backing to maintain their political machinery. This reliance often leads to policies that favor major donors, often at the expense of broader public interests.

Becoming a member of congress is a profitable and rewarding job. Here are just a few of the benefits of going to congress.

1. Starting salary for members of congress: $174,000/year.
2. Free health care at 75% coverage + unlimited medical service from the Capitol Hill attending physicians for only $500/year.
3. Eligible for early retirement; a federal pension after 5 years.

4. Free travel to and from their districts as well as for OFFICIAL travel abroad. (I bet they have a lot of official business in France and Italy!)
5. An annual office and staff allowance of $1.5 million dollars a year.
6. Members of Congress are protected from prosecution for anything they say or do as part of their official duties, under the Constitution's Speech or Debate Clause.

There are many more perks and benefits to being part of Congress. In many ways, our congress has become the ruling class and this has caused a disconnect with a lot of members of congress from the economic realities that their own constituents face.

Choose Your Pilot Wisely

Imagine boarding a plane with your family. You have two options.

The first pilot is smooth, charming, and heavily promoted. The media loves him. The passengers applaud him. But he has a history of near crashes and emergency landings.

The second pilot is blunt and unpopular in the press. But he has thirty years of flawless flying without incident.

Who do you want in the cockpit?

It's not about personality. It's about results. Everything else is just bullshit.

Final Thoughts

"The heaviest penalty for anyone not being involved in the political process is to be ruled by someone inferior to yourself"... Socrates

Government is a tool. Like fire, it can warm your house or burn it to the ground. It depends on who wields it. The United States is $34 trillion in debt. States like California are drowning in red ink. Thirteen states are facing severe financial strain. And yet, we keep electing people who treat your tax dollars like monopoly money and spend it like drunken sailors on leave.

Many vote with emotion instead of logic. They follow polls, trends, and soundbites instead of records, results, and principles.

The powerful global elites of the High Table do control some parts of our local, state, and federal government bodies, either directly or indirectly, with the deep state's help.

Our government is not perfect, but it has served us for 240 years. It works. What makes it imperfect is not the system, but some of the people. For many decades now, we have been divided and distracted. Divided by race, sex, income class, religion, and politics.

We have been distracted by the media as to what is really happening. As of lately, it seems there is a rebirth of concern, of events,of the big picture... an awakening in America.

How our government affects our lives and how the high table affects our government is off the utmost importance.

"I always thought someone should do something, until one day I realized I was someone"... John F. Kennedy

Chapter 7

LOST PRIVACY AND FREEDOM

Who's listening

We The People

Nothing is more treasured by Americans than our privacy and the freedoms we're promised in the Constitution. These aren't just words in a founding document as they're part of the American identity. But those rights are no longer as secure as we like to believe. The threat to our privacy isn't theoretical anymore. It's real, it's widespread, and it's been in place for years. Let's dive into this.

Your home, your office, your car, and definitely your phone and laptop... none of them are truly off-limits. All in the name of national security, government surveillance has crept into nearly every corner of American life.

The NSA - stands for the National Security Agency. Most Americans didn't even know it existed until fairly recently. It was officially established in October 1952 by President Harry Truman. For decades, the agency operated deep in the shadows, earning the nickname "No Such Agency." Even its existence was classified. But that began to change after September 11, 2001.

The terrorist attacks on that day changed the country overnight. And with that shift came a new piece of legislation: the US PATRIOT ACT. It was passed just weeks after the towers fell, with overwhelming bipartisan support and minimal debate. Its stated purpose was to bolster national security and give intelligence agencies the tools they needed to detect and stop terrorism. What it really did was open the door to unprecedented domestic surveillance.

Under the guise of national defense, the government gained sweeping powers to monitor emails, phone calls, financial records, and internet activity, often without a warrant. While few dispute the need to track actual threats to national security, the problem is that the net being cast didn't just catch terrorists. It caught everyone. It caught you!

The NSA now stores and profiles staggering amounts of digital data. Every phone call, text message, and email that passes through a major server is subject to collection. Legally, under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA), the NSA is supposed to limit its monitoring to foreign communications. In practice, the lines are blurry, and the oversight is often little more than a rubber stamp. The secretive FISA court, created to issue warrants for surveillance, approved over 99% of government requests for years... a virtual blank check for data collection.

The agency's budget is classified, but experts estimate it to be well over $10 billion annually, with much of that going toward advanced technologies for mass data harvesting. Its massive data center in Bluffdale, Utah, a sprawling 1.5 million square foot complex, was built to store yottabytes of information (that's a number so big it makes terabytes look like floppy disks).

Perhaps the most important turning point in public awareness came in 2013, when former NSA contractor Edward Snowden blew the whistle. He leaked thousands of classified documents revealing just how far the surveillance had gone. Programs like PRISM, XKeyscore, and Boundless Informant weren't just watching foreign threats. They were sweeping up data from ordinary Americans, often with the cooperation of major tech companies.

Snowden's revelations sparked global outrage and launched one of the most important privacy debates of the 21st century. He fled the country and has remained in exile ever since, branded either a traitor or a hero depending on who you ask.

But here's what's not up for debate: everything Snowden revealed was true. The U.S. government, through the NSA and its counterparts, has been running massive surveillance programs that most citizens knew nothing about. We've traded our privacy for a promise of protection, but there's a catch. Once you give up a right, you rarely get it back. We have all been screwed!

And if that wasn't enough, many local police departments now have access to Stingray devices, which are fake cellphone towers that trick your phone into connecting so they can capture your location, your calls, and even your texts, often without a warrant. Used in secret, these devices have become common tools for law enforcement agencies nationwide. Your digital footprint is a road map from most everything you do and everywhere you've been. And this information is not just yours anymore.

The average American commits three felonies a day, according to civil liberties attorney Harvey Silverglate. Did you know that? With that kind of data collection and that kind of legal exposure, all it takes is one agency with the wrong agenda, and your life can be upended before you even know what hit you.

So when people say, "If you've got nothing to hide, you've got nothing to worry about," they're missing the point. Privacy isn't about hiding. It's about having a space to live freely - to think, speak, and act without being watched, judged, or profiled. It's not just a personal right. It's the foundation of a free society.

Subliminal Messaging: Programming the Unconscious Mind

Most manipulation doesn't show up with a warning label. It doesn't kick down the door; it slips in quietly. It doesn't shout; it whispers. That's what makes subliminal messaging so powerful. It works because you don't notice it working.

Most people believe they think for themselves. They're confident their opinions, preferences, and decisions are their own. But the truth is harder to swallow. A lot of what we think is "ours" has been nudged into place. Planted. Repeated just enough times to sink in, all without setting off alarm bells.

This is not science fiction. It is marketing. It is politics. It is modern life.

A Timeline of Control: Subliminal Messaging Through the Decades

1950s: Birth of a Buzzword

In 1957, a market researcher named James Vicary claimed he boosted popcorn and Coca-Cola sales by inserting quick, single-frame messages into a movie reel. The images flashed so fast that the audience couldn't consciously see them. Vicary said sales spiked. His study was later discredited, but the idea had already taken root. The possibility of hidden persuasion was now real enough to scare people and attract serious attention from governments, advertisers, and the power elites.

1960s to 1970s: The Intelligence Interest

During the Cold War, the CIA explored subliminal influence under its MK-Ultra program. The agency studied mind control, behavior modification, and psychological operations. Advertisers experimented with embedded imagery in magazine ads and packaging alongside these efforts. Hidden words in ice cubes, distorted shapes in smoke, or suggestive visuals in background art were designed to plant emotional associations and trigger subconscious responses. Some were clever illusions, while others were intentional psychological hooks.

1980s to 1990s: Lawsuits and Lyrics

In the late 1980s, the band Judas Priest was sued after two young men attempted suicide. The accusation was that subliminal messages in one of their songs influenced the act. Though the band was cleared in court, the case raised public awareness about the idea that messages could be buried in audio. Backmasking - playing messages in reverse - became a cultural flashpoint. Some believed rock music was embedding secret codes. Even if some claims were exaggerated, the broader fear was justified. The power of sound to manipulate mood and perception was no longer fringe theory.

2000s to Present: The Age of Algorithms

With the rise of smartphones and social media, subliminal influence became more advanced and personal. Instead of crude hidden messages, users now receive custom-tailored content based on detailed psychological profiling. Platforms track every click, pause, and like. They use that data to predict and influence behavior, emotions, and purchases. You are shown content not because it is true or useful, but because it is likely to hold your attention. That is the modern form of control... automated, constant, and nearly invisible.

How It Works Today

Entertainment Media

TV shows and movies don't just entertain... they shape how we see the world. And they do it quietly, through repetition. Characters who question authority are often cast as paranoid, unstable, or just plain crazy. Whistleblowers? Usually loners, misfits, or outright troublemakers. Meanwhile, agencies like the FBI or

CIA are shown as heroic, clean-cut defenders of truth, even though real-life history paints a messier picture.

That's not just creative programming; it's coordinated. Agencies like the CIA and the Department of Defense have had a direct hand in shaping hundreds of Hollywood scripts. In exchange for things like military gear or permission to film on base, filmmakers let government officials review and revise scenes. This isn't a theory. It's policy. It is real. You can find it in declassified documents.

This kind of influence isn't about one movie here or there... It's systemic. Whole franchises are built with the blessing of the Pentagon or intelligence agencies. Think about how many times we've seen heroic soldiers, clean wars, or tech-savvy spies saving the day. It's not that those stories never happen. It's that we rarely see the other side; the failures, the cover-ups, the civilians caught in the crossfire... unless it's sanitized or framed in a way that protects the institution.

Even "fictional" stories carry weight. Repetition works. Show enough noble agents and selfless generals, and eventually, it sinks in: These are the good guys. Questioning them starts to feel wrong, even dangerous. That's the whole idea. Control the story, and you shape the public's trust.

And again, this isn't hidden. The CIA has a whole office called the Entertainment Liaison Office, which is dedicated to reviewing film and TV projects. The Department of Defense has something similar. If a script doesn't align with their preferred image, they can deny access to locations, gear, or personnel. That kind of leverage changes stories.

Advertising and Branding

Advertising is built on emotional manipulation. Today, that manipulation is more scientific than ever. Marketers use neurolinguistic programming, color psychology, emotional triggers, and word associations to plant messages deep into the subconscious. You are not just being sold a product. You are being sold a mood, a self-image, a version of success.

A car ad might cut between shots of the vehicle and scenes of family, open roads, or nature. The message is never stated directly. The association is built through repetition and emotional priming. You buy the car, not just for its features, but for the feeling you have been trained to connect to it.

Music and Sound

Certain frequencies affect the brain. Some lower frequencies increase tension or anxiety. Others promote calm or focus. Audio engineers and music producers use this knowledge to shape how songs feel, often without the listener realizing it. In politics, campaign ads use background music to create trust or fear. A warm piano chord during a candidate's speech creates comfort. A discordant string cue during an opponent's footage sparks discomfort.

These tools are subtle, but powerful. They guide perception without any need for debate or discussion.

News and Social Media

The most effective form of subliminal influence today comes from the constant feed of curated content on your phone. Platforms like Instagram, YouTube, and TikTok run on algorithms designed to stimulate emotion, not reason. Their goal is to keep you scrolling, not to inform you. If outrage keeps you engaged, you'll see more outrage. If fear holds your attention, you'll be fed more fear. If you spend any time at all scrolling on most any social media platform, you know this to be true. "Like" an Instagram video and send it to a friend and now your feed is full of videos on that subject. They track your patterns and your likes.

You do not need to be told what to believe. You only need to be surrounded by content that makes you feel a certain way. That is how the subconscious is trained. The more passive the viewer, the more effective the manipulation.

Why the Elites Use It

Censorship triggers resistance. Obvious propaganda gets spotted and questioned. Subliminal messaging sidesteps both. It's influence without the fight... no push, no pull, just quiet rewiring. It is happening to all of us every day.

By slipping ideas into entertainment, ads, and social media, the elites don't need to silence dissent; they just make it look stupid. They don't have to attack your values if they can slowly swap them out without you noticing.

They do it through repetition, framing, and emotional nudges. Over time, obedience starts to look like virtue. Skepticism starts to look like danger. They shape a world where going along feels safe, and asking questions feels reckless.

And the scariest part is that it works. People mock "conspiracy theories" like the High Table, that they've never looked into. They defend institutions they've never questioned. They scroll through endless content that's been designed, not just to entertain... but to distract, pacify, and mold. People become sheep without them knowing it.

The kool aid drinking has now been replaced by woolite. Now with AI in the mix, that influence is only going to get stronger.

TikTok, TikTok. The clock's ticking. We are all being somewhat controlled.

How to Spot It and Resist

Pay attention to your emotional reactions. Ask yourself what you are being told to feel, not just what is being said.

Rewatch commercials and film scenes. What images or sounds are shaping your mood? What messages are being repeated?

Take breaks from algorithm-driven platforms like Instagram and Facebook, Youtube and TikTok. Spend time with long-form, unfiltered content where you control the pace.

Learn how certain tricks like repeating messages, showing things in a specific way, and comparing ideas side by side can shape how people think and feel. These methods are used to influence your opinions and decisions, often without you even realizing it.

Encourage others to think critically. Teach your children how to spot manipulation before it takes root.

We need to learn to spot and acknowledge the tactics being used so we can ignore, block or even stop the tactics being used.

The Surveillance Tower Hiding in Plain Sight: 33 Thomas Street

In Lower Manhattan, there is a building that looks more like a fortress than an office. It is called 33 Thomas Street, also known as the Long Lines Building. Officially, it belongs to AT&T. Unofficially, it is one of the most secretive surveillance hubs in the United States.

Thanks to Edward Snowden's leaks and follow-up investigations by The Intercept and The New York Times, it was revealed that 33 Thomas Street houses a top-secret NSA surveillance operation called Titanpointe. From this location, the NSA taps into international phone calls, internet traffic, VoIP communications, and faxes, all through AT&T's network. This is not just some passive warehouse filled with wires. It is a hardened site built to survive a nuclear strike, and it serves as a key access point for the NSA's global surveillance programs.

Telecom Giants and the Quiet Compromise of Privacy

Most Americans assume that their phone calls, texts, and online activity are protected from government or corporate snooping. That is not the case. For years, major telecom providers like AT&T, Verizon, and Sprint have quietly cooperated with U.S. intelligence agencies.

In the early 2000s, a technician named Mark Klein blew the whistle on what he saw inside an AT&T building in San Francisco. He discovered Room 641A, a secret area where NSA equipment had been installed to intercept and copy all internet traffic passing through the building. This included emails, web activity, and voice calls. Everything was being duplicated and sent to the NSA without warrants or public knowledge.

This was not an isolated case. Similar setups exist in other cities across the country. These surveillance systems are deeply embedded into the infrastructure of modern telecommunications, often installed with the full cooperation of the companies involved.

The Legal Loopholes and Secret Courts

The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, or FISA, was originally passed to restrict surveillance of U.S. citizens and to ensure that the government needed a judge's approval to spy on anyone domestically. However, with the addition of Section 702 and other amendments, the law has become a loophole factory.

Section 702 technically limits surveillance to foreign targets. In practice, it allows the collection of massive amounts of data from Americans as a byproduct of those foreign investigations. Intelligence agencies call it "incidental." Civil liberties experts call it unconstitutional.

There is also the FISA Court, a secret court that approves surveillance requests. In 2022, the court approved every single surveillance request submitted by the U.S. government. Not one was rejected. This is not meaningful oversight. It is a rubber stamp.

The FBI and CIA Have Their Own Playbooks

While the NSA often steals the headlines, the FBI and CIA are also involved in domestic data collection.

The FBI uses National Security Letters, which are essentially subpoenas that do not require a judge. These letters force companies to hand over user data and include gag orders that prevent them from informing the people being surveilled.

The CIA, although technically barred from operating on American soil, has found workarounds. The agency buys massive amounts of commercially available data, including information harvested from apps and websites. If a third-party app sells your data, the CIA can buy it without violating any formal restriction.

When Surveillance Goes Wrong

This kind of unchecked power does not just threaten abstract principles. It ruins real lives.

Laura Poitras, an Oscar-winning filmmaker who became a target of government scrutiny simply for doing her job. After her reporting on the Iraq War and civil liberties, Poitras was stopped at airports over 50 times. Her electronics were seized and searched without warrants. She was never charged with a crime. Her only offense was covering stories the government didn't like... including Edward Snowden's revelations about the NSA

Shamai Leibowitz, an FBI linguist, leaked classified documents showing that the U.S. was wiretapping Israeli diplomatic offices and possibly violating international law. He served 20 months in prison for exposing illegal activity carried out in the name of security.

After 9/11, Muslim communities in New York and New Jersey were aggressively surveilled by the NYPD with support from federal agencies.

Mosques were infiltrated, businesses were monitored, and people were watched, not because of any specific crime, but because of their religion and ethnicity. These programs were later ruled unconstitutional, but not before they caused deep damage and fear within those communities.

According to a 2015 Pew Research Center survey, nearly 90 percent of Americans believe it is important to control who has access to their personal information. Yet very few realize just how much of their digital life is already exposed.

A Constitutional Crisis in Plain Sight

The Fourth Amendment guarantees protection against unreasonable searches and seizures. It requires probable cause and judicial approval before the government can spy on citizens. Warrantless mass surveillance violates that promise.

If an individual secretly recorded your phone calls or intercepted your emails, they would be committing multiple felonies. But when the government does it through secret programs and legal gymnastics, it is justified under the name of national security.

The erosion of privacy is not just a legal issue. It is a shift in the relationship between citizens and the state. Once a government has the tools to monitor everyone, it also has the power to target anyone. History has shown that such powers are rarely used wisely or sparingly.

You have already installed your own home monitoring system and you didn't know it.

If you haven't heard, there's now technology that can use your home Wi-Fi router to map out what's inside your house. No cameras required. And you willingly installed it in your home, for your family.

These systems can detect movement, shapes, and even human posture by reading how radio waves bounce around and return. This is called Wi-Fi sensing, and it works by analyzing the tiny disruptions your body causes in the signal that constantly emits from your Wi-Fi router. The same router that gives you Netflix can also be used to "see" you, even through walls.

This isn't some futuristic military project locked away in a classified lab. It already exists. Researchers at places like Carnegie Mellon have demonstrated it using off-the-shelf routers and artificial intelligence. No new hardware is needed. Just access to the signal and use the right software. They can take digital pictures of where you are in your house, whether you are standing or sitting... digital pictures of what you are doing.

Nearly every home has a router. That means most people are already living with the hardware needed for this type of surveillance, without ever realizing it. And once this kind of technology becomes standard... sold as a convenience, a safety measure, or a feature of a smart home, it will not be a question of whether it gets used. It will be a question of who uses it, and for what purpose.

The Danger of a Government Digital Currency

Imagine a future where every dollar you spend is tracked, categorized, and analyzed in real time. Not just by your bank or credit card company, but by the federal government itself. There is no cash. No financial privacy. Every transaction, whether it's a cup of coffee or a political donation, is funneled through a centralized system. This is the world of a Central Bank Digital Currency, often referred to as a CBDC, or simply the "government coin."

At first glance, it might seem convenient. No more paper bills. Instant transactions. Faster fraud protection. But once you look past the surface, the real purpose becomes clear. A CBDC is not about efficiency. It is about control.

A government-issued digital currency would be fully programmable. That means it could be shut off, frozen, or restricted depending on your actions, your political views, or even your geographic location.

Unlike decentralized cryptocurrencies such as Bitcoin, which operate independently from state power, a CBDC gives the government total command over the flow of money. It becomes the gatekeeper to every financial decision you make.

The Death of Financial Privacy

Cash still offers something digital systems don't: the ability to buy things without leaving a digital fingerprint. That freedom disappears under a CBDC. Every dollar you spend becomes a record. Every habit, preference, and purchase becomes data.

Picture donating to a controversial cause. Buying books the government deems dangerous. Supporting a candidate they dislike. With a CBDC, those actions can be logged and flagged. In extreme cases, your funds could be frozen, your access denied, and your name added to a watchlist.

This may sound extreme, but the blueprint already exists. In China, the digital yuan is tied to a national social credit system. A person's score is influenced by online behavior, political opinions, and even who they associate with. A low score can mean no access to travel, schooling, or employment. The technology is not theoretical. It is already in motion.

Programmable Money and Forced Compliance

One of the most dangerous features of a digital currency is its programmability. The government could assign expiration dates to money, restrict what it can be used for, or prevent saving altogether by forcing spending during economic downturns.

If officials decide to "stimulate" the economy, they could simply program the digital dollar to expire if it is not spent within thirty days. If they want to limit gun sales, they could block transactions at firearms retailers. If they disapprove of a protest movement, they could cut off donations or travel funds for those involved.

This is not speculation. The Bank for International Settlements, often referred to as the central bank for central banks, has published detailed reports outlining these exact capabilities. The language may be sanitized, using terms like "financial inclusion" and "anti-fraud innovation," but the meaning is clear. The goal is total visibility and total control.

With the new AI systems coming of age, computer computers will be able to analyze every time you spend, process spending patterns and savings patterns and do what humans don't have the time or focused to do... Track and map you as a person and how you spend your money and then make decisions about who you are and what you do. Does this scare you? Well, it should.

No Way Out, No Alternatives

One of the greatest dangers of a government digital currency is the elimination of alternatives. If the state phases out cash and imposes strict regulations on decentralized crypto, the public will be left with only one option: the government's official coin.

This creates a monopoly over money itself. And when the state controls the money, it controls everything tied to it. That includes travel, employment, commerce, housing, and even your ability to participate in public life. A monopoly on money is a monopoly on freedom.

Real-World Red Flags

This is not just a hypothetical concern. In Canada, during the 2022 trucker protests, the government froze the bank accounts of citizens who had donated to the movement. These were ordinary people who gave small amounts through legal channels. Without warning, they lost access to their savings.

In Nigeria, the government rolled out its own digital currency and simultaneously restricted cash access at ATMs to force public adoption. The public reacted with protests, chaos, and widespread distrust.

In the United States, the Federal Reserve has already launched pilot programs to test a digital dollar. Officials claim it is only research. But the infrastructure is being built. Once it exists, it becomes a tool ready to be used.

Why This Matters Now

A government-controlled digital currency is not just a financial product. It is a system of control, disguised as convenience. It has the power to track, restrict, and condition your ability to live a normal life.

The Constitution was written to protect our rights from overreach. The Fourth Amendment guarantees protection from unreasonable searches. The First protects speech, assembly, and expression. But none of those rights mean anything if your ability to spend, donate, travel, or eat depends on staying within the boundaries set by an unelected algorithm.

Money is freedom. And when access to money depends on approval from the state, that freedom disappears.

PRISM: When Big Tech Opened the Gates

In 2007, the Special Source Operations (SSO) division of the NSA began quietly working with some of the largest tech companies in the world to collect online communications on a massive scale. The program was code-named PRISM, and it marked a turning point in the relationship between Silicon Valley and the surveillance state.

Operating under the Protect America Act and later the FISA Amendments Act, the NSA began requesting, and in many cases, demanding access to user data from nine major U.S. companies. These included Facebook, YouTube, AOL, Skype, Apple, Microsoft, Yahoo, Google, and PalTalk. The largest volume of data came from Yahoo, Google, and Microsoft, which handled the majority of global email, search, and communication traffic at the time.

PRISM allowed the government not just to see who you were emailing, but to read the emails themselves.

It gave the NSA access to photos, documents, audio chats, file transfers, and real-time video conversations. The public was told that this was a counterterrorism tool, meant to target foreign threats. What it actually became was a blanket surveillance system that quietly swept up the personal data of millions of Americans.

These companies were not just cooperating. In some cases, they were actively building access points and automation systems to streamline the data sharing. Government analysts could search user accounts and receive fresh information on demand, without having to go through traditional legal channels. PRISM was fast, efficient, and hidden behind a wall of national security secrecy.

It wasn't just internet platforms that were involved. AT&T and Verizon, the backbone of American telecom, were also feeding information directly to the government.

AT&T had already constructed secret facilities like Room 641A in San Francisco, where internet traffic was duplicated and diverted straight to NSA systems. Verizon handed over phone records on millions of Americans under secret court orders.

The justification for all of this was rooted in the idea of "foreign intelligence." If the target was outside the United States, the NSA argued, then the communication was fair game. But because Americans use the same platforms as everyone else, domestic data was swept up in the process. The NSA called this "incidental collection." Critics called it a violation of the Fourth Amendment.

Oversight of the program was nearly nonexistent. The FISA Court, the secret judicial body that was supposed to approve surveillance requests, was often left in the dark about the full scope of what the NSA was doing. Many members of Congress had no idea how deep the data sharing went.

The public had no clue until Edward Snowden leaked the classified documents in 2013.

The revelations were staggering. The United States government, with help from private companies, had created a surveillance network more powerful than anything previously imagined. People were not being watched because they were suspects. They were being watched because they were online.

In the age of cloud storage, smartphones, and constant connectivity, the government no longer needed to break into your home to gather information. It didn't need wiretaps or warrants in the traditional sense. The tech giants had already built the infrastructure, and the NSA simply moved in.

PRISM was not about stopping one specific threat. It was about creating a system that could monitor everyone. And once that system was in place, it could be used for whatever the government decided was necessary.

The High Table Has Eyes on Everything

If you've made it this far, congratulations. You're paying attention. Most people aren't.

What we've laid out in this chapter is not speculation or science fiction. It is a blueprint of the surveillance society we already live in. Privacy is not something future generations might lose. It's something this generation has already handed over.

We now know that agencies like the NSA, FBI, and CIA have turned the tools of war inward. Programs like PRISM, XKeyscore, and Boundless Informant gave the government backdoor access to the tech we rely on every day. Your phone. Your laptop. Your emails. Your search history. All of it is fair game.

And it was not done in secret corners of Washington by rogue agents. It was done with the full cooperation of Big Tech... companies like Google, Microsoft, Apple, Yahoo, and Facebook.

The very platforms that preach transparency and open access turned around and handed over your data behind closed doors.

Telecom giants like AT&T and Verizon built the infrastructure that made it all possible. Fiber lines were split. Data duplicated. Entire cities wired for extraction.

Then came the next move: control the money.

With the rise of the Central Bank Digital Currency, the state is not just watching what you say and where you go. It's setting itself up to control what you buy, what you save, and how you live. A government coin may sound convenient, but it is a leash. Once physical cash is gone and crypto is regulated into irrelevance, there will be one option left: their system, their rules.

At this point, it's hard to argue that any of this is accidental. There is a clear and coordinated agenda to monitor, influence, and control the population. Whether you call them global elites, central planners, or just the High Table, the results are the same.

They move in the shadows, make the rules, and rarely answer to anyone.

You won't find them campaigning on TV or posting selfies online. But they are there. Behind the revolving doors of government, finance, tech, and media. Sitting on the boards. Writing the algorithms. Crafting the laws that don't apply to them. They are the architects of the system, and we are expected to play our role quietly and gratefully.

What to Watch For

- Cashless mandates: Once physical currency is gone, there is no untraceable spending.
- Mandatory digital IDs: A universal ID system tied to your health records, social activity, or financial profile can become a gateway to control.
- Expanded surveillance justification: Watch for crises used to justify more data collection. The justification will always be safety.

- Private sector enforcement: Big Tech will do what the government cannot. They will censor, suspend, restrict, and flag - all while claiming it's for your benefit.
- Public apathy: The biggest red flag of all is that people stop caring. When surveillance becomes normal, freedom becomes the exception.

Protect Yourself

- Use cash when possible. Every time you swipe, you leave a trail. Every trail feeds the machine. Cash is the green new deal!
- Limit smart device usage. Your phone is a tracking device. Be smart about what you say near it and what permissions you allow.
- Avoid default settings. Whether it's browsers, apps, or social platforms, customize your privacy settings.
- Turn off location tracking, microphone access, and background data syncing.
- Support decentralized tech. Use encrypted messaging (like Signal), privacy-focused browsers (like Brave or Firefox), and alternative search engines (like DuckDuckGo).
- Diversify assets. Keep some savings outside the banking system. Precious metals, physical goods, and decentralized crypto can offer options if the system locks you out.
- Stay aware. Read to learn. Ask who benefits. Question the convenient answers. Distrust the slogan “if you’ve got nothing to hide...”

This chapter isn’t just about lost privacy. It’s about a deeper loss; the loss of personal autonomy... of control over your own life. The High Table doesn't need your permission. It just needs your silence. The Powerful global Elite are using all of our information against us for total control.

Chapter 8

COMMON SENSE

The power of one

THE POWER OF ONE.
FEAR IS A TOOL.

There was once a great flood. The Police went to every home in the flood zone to evacuate everyone before it was too late. When they knocked on Joe's door, he told the police, "I'm not leaving... God will save me."

The very next day, the flood waters reached the second floor. When the police boat came by, Joe looked out the second-floor window and told them," I'm not leaving... God will save me."

The next day, Joe was on the roof because the flood waters had risen. The Police dropped a rope ladder to save Joe, but he refused again, saying, "God will save me".

Joe drowned that very night. When he got to heaven, he told God that he was very disappointed in him for not saving him.

God slapped Joe and told him "You are a moron. I sent a car for you, I sent a boat for you, I even sent a chopper".

God helps those who help themselves. Like Joe, too many people today are waiting for God to save them. We are all endowed with free will- the ability to take action in our lives.

Whether or not you believe there's a powerful group working behind the scenes to shape a new world order isn't the point. You can call it a conspiracy theory if you want. What you can't ignore are the real, escalating problems we're all dealing with right now: the collapse of the middle class, runaway inflation, a broken fiat currency system, open borders (until at least 2025), rising crime, the steady loss of civil liberties, government overreach into our private lives, surging drug use, confusion and conflict over gender identity, punishing tax burdens, and the looming threats of terrorism and war.

Fear is one of the most effective tools of control. The powerful elites, along with parts of our own government, keep the public off-balance with constant threats of war, pandemics, and climate catastrophe. They stir up panic so they can step in as the saviors. But let's use some common sense. China is not going to bomb New York City when they already own massive amounts of U.S. businesses and property. Why destroy what you've invested in? In some ways, the global economy acts as a safety net. Most major corporations are financially entangled across borders, which only gives the elites more leverage and control.

Some will say that everything happening right now is just a coincidence. But strangely, all of these crises seem to align perfectly with the three main goals of the global elite: first, the creation of a single, centralized world government; second, the roll-out of a global digital currency; and third, a dramatic reduction in the world's population... by any means necessary, and by as much as 50 percent. None of this is possible without first weakening the United States. And so far, they're doing a disturbingly good job. So far.

For the sake of reference, it doesn't really matter what name you choose to give them. Some call them the High Table, the Round Table, the Global Elites, the Internationalists, the Power Elites, or the Invisible Government. In this book, we've used "The High Table" and "Global Elites" as general terms. They may not even use a name themselves, which helps them stay hidden. For further background, look up Dr. John Coleman's 1994 talk on the Committee of 300. He outlines a hidden ruling class that manipulates global finance, culture, and media from behind the scenes.

The Master Trend: Individuality vs Individualism

In her 1993 article "The MASTER TREND", Cheryl Russell identified individualism as the dominant force reshaping American society. She observed that "the master trend is individualism," a shift that began in the early 1970s and has since permeated various aspects of life, including family structures, consumer behavior, and cultural norms.

Cheryl Russell made an important distinction between individuality and individualism. INDIVIDUALITY refers to a person's unique qualities: your identity, talents, and personality. It is what makes each person distinct in a natural and healthy way. INDIVIDUALISM, in contrast, is a cultural mindset that places the self above all else. Russell warned that when individualism becomes the dominant value, it leads to isolation, self-contentedness, and the decline of community life. It encourages people to put personal wants ahead of shared responsibility.

This shift did not happen by accident. It was gradually introduced and reinforced, weakening the social fabric and making it easier for those in power to control a disconnected and divided population.

Russell noted that this trend led to a society where personal choice and self-expression became paramount. This shift was evident in the proliferation of niche markets and tailored products, reflecting a broader move towards personalization in all areas of life.

Media and Entertainment:

Once, there were only a handful of TV channels, and everyone watched the same programs. Streaming services like Netflix, YouTube, and TikTok feed us exactly what we want, based on our tastes, habits, and political leanings. Everyone lives in their own media bubble. This reinforces individualism by confirming personal preferences and shielding people from opposing views.

Politics and Identity:

Voter behavior has become less about shared national interest and more about personal identity. People are encouraged to see politics through the lens of race, gender, lifestyle, or grievance rather than through common goals. The more fragmented the public becomes, the easier it is for elites to control the narrative and divide the vote.

Religion and Spirituality:

Traditional religious institutions have declined, while custom spiritual practices have grown. Many people now say things like, "I'm spiritual, not religious," choosing to construct personal belief systems rather than subscribe to shared doctrine or community worship. This weakens institutional power and breaks down the cultural cohesion that religion once provided.

Education and Self-Esteem Culture:

Many schools today concentrate more on making students focus on diversity and re-writing history in a negative way. Instead of encouraging honest debate or critical thinking, students are often taught that their personal feelings and perspectives are beyond question, as if all opinions carry equal weight regardless of evidence or logic. This creates a mindset where personal feelings matter more than facts, and where questioning oneself or others is seen as offensive. It's a subtle but powerful way to discourage independent thought.

She warned that this extreme focus on individualism could erode communal bonds and shared values, leading to a fragmented society. The emphasis on personal preference (you might say selfishness) over collective well-being, she argued, might undermine the social cohesion necessary for a functioning democracy.

Russell's insights from over thirty years ago are more relevant now than ever. The tension between personal freedom and social responsibility has become a battleground, and those in power have taken full advantage. By promoting extreme individualism, the High Table has slowly eroded the sense of community and shared purpose that once held society together. When people are focused only on themselves, they become easier to divide, easier to distract, and easier to control. This was not just a cultural trend. It was a deliberate strategy.

Today, nearly all of us have been affected in some way by the Master Trend. Some only slightly, others far more deeply. Whether we recognize it or not, this shift toward engineered individualism has shaped the way we think, vote, and live. Understanding it is the first step in resisting its influence. But that's not easy. Most people will never admit that their choices or beliefs have been manipulated. We like to think we're fully in control of our decisions. That illusion is part of the trap.

As the old saying goes, the greatest trick the devil ever pulled was convincing the world he didn't exist. The same can be said for the High Table and their cultural programming. Through media, entertainment, education, and politics, they have slowly pushed a message: put yourself first, trust emotion over reason, and reject tradition as outdated. This has not been a coincidence. It has been a carefully managed shift in belief systems, rolled out quietly over decades.

A thousand years ago, nearly everyone believed the earth was flat. Popular belief is not proof of truth. From time to time, we all need to wash our brains; not to erase who we are, but to clear away what was never truly ours to begin with.

This trend of Individualism has caused many problems. Divorces, broken homes, fewer religious affiliations, lower marriage rates, lower birth rates, higher crime rates, and an overall withdrawal from neighborhood and community participation. All are part of the global elitist agenda to weaken America. The significance of this article cannot be overstated or overlooked to see where we are today and where we are headed... from the fifties to today, from baby boomers to the current generation.

The state of New Hampshire, one of America's original 13 colonies, carries a bold motto: "Live Free or Die." These were not just dramatic words. They reflected a real belief held by the founders of this country: that freedom was worth more than life itself.

Today, how many Americans would still agree with that? How many have been conditioned to trade liberty for safety, privacy for convenience, or truth for comfort? The High Table knows that a population afraid to die will eventually accept any form of control. That is why preserving the founding spirit of freedom is not just patriotic... it is essential for survival.

The Power of One, Multiplied

"Live separately but unite to fight." - Napoleon

Just as it took decades for the global elites to accumulate their wealth, power, and influence, it will take time to dismantle their agenda. Their goals are not hidden. They seek a single world government, a unified digital currency, a common language, and a dramatic reduction in the global population. None of this will happen overnight, and neither will be stopping it. But the longer we wait, the harder it becomes. Action must begin now.

The most powerful weapon against the High Table is YOU...But not you alone. Despite what Hollywood may show, there are no Rambos. An army of one is not an army at all. Napoleon had it right. We must unite to fight.

You cannot fight the High Table with an army. They already control the military. You cannot fight them with money either. They hold more than half of the world's wealth. But here's the good news.

They are outnumbered. There are nearly 8 billion people on this planet and only a small number at the top pulling the strings. Some believe the true core of global control lies with about 300 individuals. Whether that number is exact or not, the reality is the same. A tiny elite holds power over billions, and they depend on the rest of us staying quiet, distracted, and divided.

They use fear, misinformation, and manufactured division to keep control. Their biggest advantage is that most people don't realize how much power they have when united. Once people start asking the right questions, thinking critically, and reaching out to others, the Elites system begins to weaken.

Taking control starts in the mind. It spreads through conversations, choices, and community. You do not need a billion dollars or political office to make a difference. You need awareness, conviction, and the courage to speak up. That is how change begins.

The High Table is powerful. They can target anyone, but they cannot target everyone.

That is the key. Now is the time to build your circle of like-minded people. Form your own network of influence. The larger, the stronger. Every great empire and every revolution started with just one person who had the courage to act. Our own nation began with seven founding fathers: John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, John Jay, and George Washington. Ask yourself, how many people do you know? What could you accomplish together?

But before you take action, get informed. Do your homework. What is your agenda? Is it based on facts or emotions? Know what is real and what is propaganda. Understand the bigger picture so you can speak the truth and not just echo headlines.

We all belong to peer groups. These are the people we share our lives with: family, neighbors, co-workers, church members, and business contacts. The elites behind the Master Trend have tried to separate us from these groups by pushing a self-centered, disconnected mindset. They want people isolated, distracted, and focused on personal gain instead of the good of the community. That mindset makes the population easier to control. The most important step we can take is to reconnect and unite.

Common ground is the key to unity. We need to stop obsessing over our differences and start building on what we share. Most people want the same things: peace, family, good health, freedom, security, and a future worth believing in. If aliens from space invaded tomorrow, no one would care about political parties, race, or social labels. We would come together as Americans. So why wait for an invasion for us to come together?

Picture a country without all the political theater and wasted money. Imagine if leaders focused on our infrastructure, repairing roads, fixing bridges, building new schools, and actually solving problems. But that would take away the distractions the High Table relies on. When someone robs a bank, they light a fire down the street to draw attention away. This is no different.

Start with those closest to you. Unite with your immediate circle. As an individual, you are limited.

But if you become an influencer- someone who speaks with clarity, earns trust, and leads by example, you can shift minds and shape decisions. That is real power. Find people who want a free and open society, not a controlled one. Then, act your inner circle is only 10 people, and they all have 10 people, you are now 100 strong, and those 100 have 10 people, that's 1000 strong, etc., etc.

Anyone that does not pay attention and do their part should not complain at all when it all goes wrong. The High Table only exists because the public allowed it to. Apathy gave them ground. Complacency gave them strength.

So, how do you get the rats off the ship? You stop feeding them. I've seen it firsthand in the ports of Boston and New York. When there is no food on the ship, the rats come crawling down the mooring ropes. Time to rid our ship of all the rats. As president Trump says "Drain the Swamps."

The High Table and the deep state can stop anyone. But they cannot stop everyone. Unity is the greatest weapon. We have even seen them go after former presidents and fail. Why? Because enough people stood together. And when that happens, common sense begins to rise again.

Beware The Manic Media

One of the most important steps in keeping the High Table in check is to start checking. That means fact-checking everything. One of the biggest reasons the global elites have gained so much influence is because of our complacency. Historically, people tend to start paying attention only when things get bad. That time is now.

Start with the media. If you want to understand the message, you need to look at the messenger. Ask yourself: Who owns the major media outlets, and what agenda are they pushing?

Today, just a few powerful corporations control most of the news and entertainment in America. Comcast owns NBC. Disney owns ABC. Paramount Global owns CBS. Warner Bros. Discovery owns CNN. When this much power is concentrated in so few hands, it is easy for the narrative to be steered, distorted, or completely fabricated.

Common sense tells you that media conglomerates will use their platforms to protect their interests and promote the viewpoints that serve their political and financial goals. If they are selling a story, it is worth asking who profits when you believe it.

Everyone should fact-check major stories, especially those that affect your money, your health, your freedom, or your safety. Whether it is a new law, a medical emergency, an economic warning, or a political headline, dig deeper. Do not settle for the surface version.

President Ronald Reagan once said, “Trust but verify.” That was a long time ago. Today, the smarter approach is, “Do not trust. Verify, and then verify again.” The media has proven time and time again that it does not deserve blind trust. If truth is the first casualty of war, then media is the battlefield.

Solving Inflation

Inflation is a hidden tax. It eats away at your savings, weakens your paycheck, and slowly destroys your standard of living. Most people feel it, even if they don't fully understand where it's coming from. The truth is, much of it starts with how our economy is managed... or mismanaged.

Since 1913, the Federal Reserve has been in charge of our economic system. For decades, many believed the people at the Fed were financial experts, the smartest minds in the room. That belief is fading fast. More people are waking up to the fact that the Fed's decisions often protect the wealthy while harming the working class.

We need a better system. One that makes sense. One that works for the people.

A free-market economy, often called laissez-faire, is built on simple logic. Supply and demand. Natural competition.

Minimal interference from the government. When left to function without constant manipulation, markets tend to correct themselves. The Federal Reserve does the opposite. It intervenes constantly, distorting the natural flow of the economy and often creating more problems than it solves.

Some still believe the Fed can fix everything by printing more money. That is a dangerous myth. Printing more dollars without value behind them only weakens the currency. It leads to inflation, and if left unchecked, it can trigger hyperinflation. That means your savings, your retirement, and your financial future can be wiped out overnight.

Common sense tells us that the economy should be run by people who understand how money works in the real world. Successful business leaders, not lifelong politicians, should be making the key financial decisions.

Government was never designed to function like a business, and most politicians have no idea how to balance a budget, let alone manage a national economy.

If we keep letting the same people make the same mistakes, the outcome will not change. Prices will keep rising. The middle class will keep shrinking. Dependency will grow. And the dollar in your pocket will keep losing value.

This is fixable, but only if people stop blindly trusting the system and start demanding real leadership. The longer we stay passive, the worse the damage becomes. If we don't act, we won't just be struggling. We'll be broke, dependent, and controlled.

The High Table doesn't want a strong, financially independent population. They want a society that is too burdened by inflation, confused by misinformation, and distracted by political noise to fight back. An economy in crisis gives them cover to centralize more power, push digital currencies, and make citizens reliant on the government for survival.

Economic instability isn't just a failure of leadership. It's part of the playbook. A broke and desperate population is much easier to manage than one that thinks for itself and stands on its own. If we don't stop it, we're not just losing money. We're losing freedom.

The solution starts with awareness. Then action. It means holding the right people accountable and replacing the ones who sold us out.

Reducing The Deficit

Downsize, Cut, and Reduce Federal and State Government

When businesses face tough times, they downsize. When families struggle financially, they cut back. So why is the government the only institution that refuses to do the same? Cutting government does not mean eliminating it. It means reducing its size, scope, and overreach. The federal government is loaded with unnecessary agencies, departments, bureaus, and committees.

Many of these could be trimmed or shut down entirely. Cutting just 35 to 50 percent of this administrative sprawl would reduce payrolls, shrink budgets, and make a real dent in the deficit.

One of the smartest moves would be to return many federal responsibilities to the states. For example, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare could be closed, and control over education returned to the states. FEMA is another agency that would function more effectively at the state level. with a federal assist. The people of Georgia know far better how to manage their communities than a pack of politically appointed bureaucrats in Washington, D.C.

It is also important to remember that government jobs are political currency. The deep state uses them to build loyalty, secure power, and expand influence. Every layer of unnecessary staffing strengthens their grip. Downsizing weakens that control.

The idea that one policy fits every state has always been flawed. New England is nothing like Texas. The West Coast has little in common with Ohio or Wisconsin. Each region is unique and far more capable of managing its own welfare, education, infrastructure, and emergency services.

Returning power to the states would improve efficiency, reduce waste, and save billions. Local governments are more accountable, more responsive, and more in tune with the people they serve.

Finally, we must cut the mountain of excessive laws and regulations that are choking small businesses and individual freedom. Rules should protect, not punish. The current system does the opposite. There is a Chinese proverb from 2000 years ago: "When there are too many laws, the people become lawless" - Lao Tsu If we are serious about reducing the deficit, we need less government, fewer regulations, and more power returned to the people.

Taxes Solution

Eliminate the income tax and replace it with a flat-rate consumption tax of 15 percent. This tax would be collected at the point of sale, making the system simple, transparent, and efficient. By doing this, we could eliminate the need for most of the IRS and its massive operating costs, which currently total around 16 billion dollars per year.

While a small portion of the IRS would still be needed to monitor the collection and enforcement of the new consumption tax, the rest could be repurposed. There are currently 82,990 IRS employees. Many of them could be retrained and reassigned to help secure our borders and assist in the removal of the estimated 22 million illegal immigrants living in the United States.

Imagine a government that focused on removing criminals and securing the nation instead of targeting hardworking taxpayers.

Think about the shift in morale. Many of these agents would probably prefer meaningful fieldwork over endless piles of paperwork.

This kind of tax reform would simplify the system, save money, increase accountability, and return a sense of fairness to a process that has long been broken. It would also send a clear message that our government works for the people, not the other way around.

Voting

Voting is one of the most powerful tools we have against the ultra-powerful High Table. If your vote didn't matter, the global elites wouldn't spend billions of dollars trying to influence it. That alone should tell you something. Common sense says to look closely at each candidate and what they truly represent.

The Master Trend and the manic media both play a major role in shaping public opinion, especially around election time. And that doesn't even include the subliminal programming baked into entertainment, news, and digital platforms.

Everyone should vote, but that vote should not be based on emotion, party loyalty, or pressure from so-called experts. Sometimes one must choose to vote for the lesser of two evils.

To help cut through the noise, use the Common Sense Criteria; CSC for short. It has three pillars:

Pillar 1: Policy

Don't get distracted by promises or catchy slogans. Look at what the candidate actually stands for. If you can't figure out where they stand, maybe they don't stand for much at all. First, identify what policies are most important to you and to the country as a whole. Then compare that list to the candidate's positions. Don't fall for vague answers or political tap dancing.

Also, study their track record. What legislation have they supported? What causes have they championed? Talk is cheap, and politicians are masters at saying what people want to hear. Watch what they have done, not just what they say they will do.

Pillar 2: Character

Look into their background. That includes employment history, criminal record, marital status, lawsuits, and any serious allegations of misconduct. Character matters. A person's past is often the clearest sign of what they will do in the future.

Pillar 3: Qualifications

Consider their education, business experience, military service, major achievements, and unique skills. What have they built or accomplished? Can they manage responsibility under pressure? Are they capable of leading with integrity?

Voting is not just a civic duty. It is a weapon. And when you combine your vote with the voices of your peer group, your influence grows. Share information. Encourage discussion. If you build your network and stay informed, your voting footprint becomes something bigger. Think less like a single voter and more like Bigfoot walking into the polling booth. It will take a Bigfoot to kick over the High Table.

We all know the system is rigged and controlled, but you can choose to rise above it or be victimized by it. The following is a blueprint for SUCCESS, and anyone who's tired of just surviving and ready to start is based on real-life experiences and invaluable lessons learned on my journey. While the world has dramatically changed since this was written many years ago, the message hasn't. If anything, it's more urgent now.

Thriving vs Just Surviving

"Every morning in Africa, a gazelle wakes up knowing it must run faster than the fastest lion or it will be killed. Every morning, a lion wakes up knowing it must outrun the slowest gazelle or it will starve to death. It doesn't matter whether you are a lion or a gazelle. When the sun comes up, you'd better be running!"

The person who wrote this slept in the next day, and a lion ate him.

So, are you going to have dinner or be dinner? The choice is yours. Kick-start yourself every day. No one else is going to. You, and only you, can change the story of your life.

Expectations. Dreams. Goals. Just words. It seems that today, the new generation's ambitions and dreams have been greatly diminished, lowered, and stifled. Expectations have been replaced with complacency. Goals are becoming mediocre.

What has caused this lowering of expectations? Sixty-two percent of Americans today do not have any emergency savings. The goal of this article is to get you thriving, not just surviving.

Stop believing what "the top" has programmed you subconsciously to believe: that you should give up and accept mediocrity. Start believing in yourself. Life will slap you into oblivion if you allow it. Go big or go home. The first step is to decide where you want to be.

You can't get anywhere if you don't know where you want to go.

Your normal body temperature is 98.6°F. You also have a financial temperature. Everything you do, everywhere you go, and everything you eat costs money. If you are one of the 62 percent of Americans who have little or no capital at your disposal, you are dead financially. On a scale of 1 to 10, you are at zero. Money is only a tool to buy you time and freedom.

What are the biggest obstacles standing in the way of an incredible life? Attitude and philosophy. How do you see the world? How does the world see you? What do you believe to be true?

Attitude is altitude, but a bad attitude will keep you flying low. First, check your financial temperature gauge(fuel). Then check your attitude/altitude gauge.

What is your financial attitude? Any of the following beliefs are a recipe for failure:

"I have rich parents."

"The government will provide for me."

"I'm waiting for my big break."

"I'm really quite happy living hand to mouth."

"God will take care of everything." (poor Joe)

"I will win the lotto soon."

"It's not my fault. I've just had bad luck."

"I feel entitled to a great life."

By far, one of the greatest issues facing our current generation is this: Can you cope?

There is a widespread misunderstanding between mental weakness and mental illness. Mental weakness is often miscategorized as mental illness.

The definition of "cope" is to strive, to face, and to deal with responsibilities and problems.

How many times have you heard someone say, "I just can't deal with this"? That's not illness; that's weakness. Not coping is choosing to put off responsibility, and putting off responsibility means putting off your goals.

Woodpeckers don't get headaches. Learn to cope.

Tools to help you thrive

- No blame to fame. Stop blaming others for where you are. You are exactly where you belong. You put yourself there.
- "You can't get up in the world if you can't get up in the morning."
- Avoid energy vampires and time bandits. They will drain your energy and waste your time.
- Be pragmatic about your goals. Be a realist. Go big or go home, but don't go intergalactic unless you're a rocket scientist.
- "If the river is wide, don't try to cross it in one leap." In life, you need to jump from stone to stone.

- "Ships are safe in the harbor, but that's not what ships are built for." You will miss 100 percent of the shots you don't take.
- Visualize. See your dreams live in your mind as much as possible. Keep the picture of success in front of you, and it will happen.
- When in doubt, shut up. "Better to be silent and thought a fool than to speak and remove all doubt."
- Short-term vs. long-term. Most people today are living in a short-term mindset. They are financial prisoners who can't escape because of their financial temperature. Most people are too busy making a living to make any money. Short-term thinking produces small results. Long-term thinking builds real success.
- Never focus on money. Focus on doing the job well and being passionate about what you do, and the money will follow.
- Avoid the naysayers. The world is full of dreamers, but you must wake up first and act on those dreams. Naysayers often have a low financial temperature, but they always seem to have a lot of ideas. Ask yourself: if they know so much, why haven't they done it?
- Don't be a snowflake. They melt instantly. Words are hollow. Today, many people are fragile. Sometimes, criticism is like fertilizer for your brain, but insults should be judged by their source. "Nothing coming from nothing is nothing." - Mike Mattera

"If you want to go fast go alone.

If you want to go far, go together"

- African proverb

"AMERICA IS A SONG THAT MUST BE SUNG TOGETHER"

APPENDIX

Global Elite Organizations: Contact Information and Overview

Club of Rome

Address: Lagerhausstrasse 9, 8400 Winterthur, Switzerland

Phone: +41 52 244 0808

Website: https://www.clubofrome.org

Contact Page: https://www.clubofrome.org/contact-us/

Overview: Founded in 1968, the Club of Rome is a global think tank that gained prominence with its 1972 report, The Limits to Growth. It focuses on complex global issues, including economic growth, environmental sustainability, and social development.

Bilderberg Group

Website: https://www.bilderbergmeetings.org

Press Contact Email: media@bilderbergmeetings.org

Overview: Established in 1954, the Bilderberg Group holds annual private conferences attended by political leaders, experts from industry, finance, academia, and the media. The meetings are closed to the public and press, leading to various speculations about their discussions.

World Economic Forum (WEF)

Headquarters Address: 91-93 Route de la Capite, CH-1223 Cologny/Geneva, Switzerland

Phone: +41 22 869 1212

Email:contact@weforum.org

Website: https://www.weforum.org

Trilateral Commission

North American Office Address: 2021 L St. NW Ste 101, # 320, Washington, DC 20036-4914, USA

European Office Address: 95, rue Amsterdam, 75008 Paris, France

Phone (Europe): +33 1 45 61 42 80

Bohemian Grove (Bohemian Club)

City Clubhouse Address: 624 Taylor Street, San Francisco, CA 94102, USA

· Phone: (415) 421-2300

Website: https://www.bohemianclub.com

Credits:

Special thanks to Maurice Naragon for design work, writing and research

Copyright © 2025 by Prof. C. Mattera
All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise without the prior written permission of the author, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical reviews and specific other noncommercial uses permitted by copyright law. This book is a work of nonfiction. While every effort has been made to ensure accuracy. Every story, strategy, and insight shared and authored by Prof. C. Mattera. For permissions, inquiries, or bulk orders, contact Prof. C. Mattera